Chapter 753

Mount Dragon Treasure Mountain, Fortune River.

James sat on a rock with his phone in hand, analyzing what happened in the three months before the Cadens' villa was set ablaze ten years ago.

Quincy saw beside him and asked, "What are you looking at, James?"

Thea's curiosity was also piqued.

Last night, she concluded that she did not want to lose James to Quincy. Therefore, she went to look for them and coincidentally joined their trip. Until now, she still had no idea what James' plan was.

James put his phone down and looked at the mountain across the river, explaining, "I'm looking at the weather reports back then.

I'm trying to deduce the river's depth by analyzing if there was any heavy rain that year." Quincy frowned and asked, "Why do you need to know the water levels?" James explained, "Back then, I jumped into the river and held onto a log, floating along the current. That's how I survived. I didn't sink to the bottom of the river, so I definitely drifted to the underground cavern along the river's current. Determining the water levels would allow me to have a rough gauge of the cavern's location."

Thea could not help but ask, "Honey, are you looking for an underground cavern? Why are you looking for it? You can ask me if that's what you're trying to figure out. I used to play along the Fortune River frequently."

James turned to Thea and asked doubtfully, "You're familiar with such things?"

Thea fell into thought.

She racked her mind and said, "I remember there was a severe drought that year. It hadn't rained for several months, and the water levels were relatively shallow. I was catching crabs by the river with a few classmates."

James asked, "Are you sure?"

"Yeah." Thea nodded.

The memories from ten years ago tormented her for a long time, so much that it was impossible for her to forget.

James looked at the gushing river in front of him and fell into deep thought. After a while, he reached a conclusion,

If there was a severe drought ten years ago, the water levels then would be incredibly shallow, al about ten to twenty meters deep.

He sat on the rock absent -inindedly. The virus carried by the Gu in his body had already affected his brain and nervous system.

It was difficult for him to think for an extended period. Otherwise, he would suffer from unbearable headaches, Soon, the soldiers that had gone looking for residents returned. “We’ve obtained information about several underground caverns under that mountain opposite from us. They extend in all directions and are interconnected.”

“A few villagers also mentioned another cavern on the opposite riverbank, but it had already been flooded with water.”

“Yeah. I heard about that one too. It’s around that area.” The soldiers reported the information they gathered one by one.

James nodded after listening to them. He pointed to the mountain opposite them and instructed, “Head to that cliff and dive ten to twenty meters underwater. After finding the underground cavern, go inside and check if there’s a statue.”

James remembered that the cavern where he found the medical book extended in various directions. He wandered for a very long time and found a statue. Near the statue, he found the medical book
