Chapter 475: Chapter 475: Shut Up (part one)

"Although I don't live in the suburbs, I work on the military base, it's far from here. Got a problem with that?" Daisy squinted at Mary. She wore her uniform today, so she sat up straight, as a good soldier should. She looked very spirited and there was no trace of laziness in her image.

Okay, I'll drop it. I only want to know why you caused problems between my mother and my father. Do you still want to come back to our house? Do you think it possible?"

Mary turned the cup in her hand and stared at Daisy in an aggressive manner, her eyes full of contempt. She hated Daisy to the core. Why she was always blessed by the gods? Why did she easily get all the nice things in the world? First, she was born into a good family. Then she got married to a handsome man and became the mother of an adorable boy. What was more irritating to Mary was that Daisy climbed up to the high position of a Colonel at such a young age. All these were something she couldn't get even if she toiled and struggled for her whole life, while Daisy getting them so easily as if they were at her fingertips. How could she not feel envious, jealous and hateful?

Your house? Huh! As a Colonel, I don't miss that dirty place at all! Why do you think I'd even want to?"

Although she said it easily, she felt very sad in her heart. Mary said "my father", yes! From the moment when Mary and Yakira entered the house, Daisy's father had become Mary's father. Daisy couldn't remember any moment that she could feel her father's love for her since they came. So Mary was right. It was Daisy's fault to still hold onto the sweet memory she enjoyed in childhood, even her relationship with her family had come to this hopeless point.

Since you don't miss the place, why did you start trouble between my parents by saying that my mother took 500 million from Edward's family? Do you think you're really worth such a huge amount of money?"

Mary hummed with a sneer and looked at Daisy closely from head to toe, showing a disapproving and contemptuous look. It was true that Daisy had a good family background and had a good look, but Mary still didn't believe that Edward's family would spend 500 million on the marriage. It was an exorbitant amount.

I have never thought that I could be measured by money. Are you saying that you can be bought by the pound? As for whether your mother has taken 500 million or not, you'd better ask your mother yourself. Because she was the one who said it."

Daisy took a sip of the coffee the waiter served moments ago. She narrowed her eyes and looked at Mary with derision. Mary was obviously pissed off. She looked furious as if she wanted to swallow Daisy raw and whole. In Daisy's eyes, life couldn't be measured by money. People should learn to treasure life, only by doing so would they show respect to life. So Daisy would never play with her life, not to mention gambling on other people's lives.

Bought by the pound? Are you calling me a prostitute? You're not hot stuff to me. Even if you are a Colonel, you're nothing but a humble maid in my house!" Mary failed in her attempt to insult Daisy, on the contrary, she was degraded by Daisy's remarks. Mary felt resentful. In her eyes, Daisy was always the girl who swallowed the insult. But when did she become so eloquent?

Humble maid? Miss Ouyang, do you mean I should be grateful because you took my place? It is hardly possible for a crow to become a phoenix, but for a princess to be reduced to poverty? That couldn't be easier. I'm curious why a noble person like you would want to meet humble person like me. Aren't you afraid that you will degrade yourself by speaking with me? You have such a superior identity as a noble princess."

Daisy said ironically. She didn't care whether she would irritate Mary with her sharp remarks. She sneered while raising her eyebrows. There was even a playful smile in her eyes. It seemed that after being with Edward for a long time, the innocent Colonel Ouyang was influenced by Edward and had also become wicked.

You bitch, do you think that I really want to see you? Who do you think you are? If you didn't try to ruin our family, if you didn't cause problems here, do you think I'd be willing to speak to you?" Mary was enraged by Daisy's words. This woman had belittled her enough. She began to speak without thinking.

You bitch! What makes you think I'm a bitch? I'm a Colonel, I earned every accolade. Did I steal other people's fathers? Or their husband? Aren't these the things you and your mother excel at?" Daisy said coldly. Within a second, Daisy already crossed the table in front of her, her tender fingers firmly grasping Mary's lower jaw, her eyes glaring at Mary ferociously.

Daisy, what are you doing? Are you going to beat me up right here? Aren't you afraid that you'll be punished by the army?" Gazing at Daisy, she could see the colonel had a sinister look on her face. Mary was frightened. She couldn't imagine that the cruel woman before her was the Daisy she knew. Daisy used to be a very weak and vulnerable maid in her house. And she felt horrible, Daisy was like the evil god Sura from Hell.

Punish? I'm a Colonel, do you think anyone will trust you? Do you think that I will be punished because I beat a woman who insults a military officer? What can you if I send you to jail today? Let alone beat you here. You'd better watch your vicious foul mouth, or you'll quickly find a bullet in your head.

It was true that Daisy's attitude was imperious, but she really had the ability to mess with Mary. If she really became ruthless, it was a breeze for her to get rid of her. It depended on whether Daisy was willing to dirty her noble hands to do it.

Chapter 476: Chapter 476: Shut Up (part two)

"Ah! Help! Sh-sh-she's going to kill me!" Although Mary's jaw was firmly gripped by Daisy's hand, she began to call for help. Who knew if Daisy meant it or not? But if you looked at how cold she was, the rage in her eyes, it looked like she was serious.

"Kill you? Do you think you deserve to be killed by a Colonel? Shut up, or I might carry through on my promises. The more you smart off to me, the angrier I'll get. I think you don't need me to remind you of this. This is what I'm like. Surprised by my little hobby, huh?"

Daisy sensed the gaze of other people boring into her from the corner of her eye. She narrowed her eyes and released Mary. Ultimately, she was helpless. She didn't want to ruin her good image and the image of the whole troop. So she couldn't do anything to this hateful woman. But at least she vented her anger by intimidating her.

You... You..." Hearing Daisy's words, angry as she was, Mary didn't dare spit out any more insults. Mary was terrified by Daisy's evil look. Besides, the dignified uniform Daisy wore alone would have made Mary humble herself in the presence of Daisy.

What else do you want to say? If you've nothing else to say, I'm leaving." Daisy knew she already attracted attention from other people around the place, so she must leave here as soon as possible. If she was recognized by anyone, she would get into trouble. She didn't want to make the headlines of tomorrow's newspapers because of this.

Haha! Daisy, is this how you abuse your position? So bullying innocent citizens is also your duty." Followed by sweet laughter, Jessica appeared before them. She came with another woman, who looked prettier than her. But the woman seemed more aloof and she looked graceful with good temperament.

It's you, Jessica. What a coincidence!" Daisy had planned to leave, she didn't expect that she would meet Jessica here. She smiled helplessly. She shouldn't have gone out today. Everyone she met today made her feel sick. She felt lucky that she didn't have dinner yet, otherwise she would throw up immediately.

Yes, it's such a coincidence. Otherwise I would never know that the famous Colonel Ouyang of S City would bully a defenseless woman." Jessica was smarter than Mary. She knew how to hurt others while not showing it too obviously. Although in her eyes, Mary was not easy to deal with, her goal was Daisy now, so she didn't mind taking sides with that brainless woman for the moment.

It is not too late if you realize it now. Or Miss Lin, Do you also want to know how it feels?" Daisy raised her eyebrows and examined Jessica closely. She could hear the derision in Jessica's words. She glanced at the woman standing beside Jessica with interest. The woman stared at Daisy in disgust. Daisy didn't remember when she had offended this woman and triggered that resentful look.

I...Do you really think that I will be intimidated by you? Ha! It'll never happen. And by the way, does Edward know that you are a two-faced woman?"

Jessica pulled out a chair and sat down. There was no reason for her to stand while let Daisy sit there steadily. She was not a maid or a waitress, so she was reluctant to degrade her noble identity in front of Daisy.

Oh! Yes. So Hank has your back. And of course you don't need to be afraid of me. But the fact is he's in trouble now, and he has no idea what will happen to him. Do you think you can keep yourself out of this business? As for what kind of woman I am, sorry to disappoint you. My husband has told me that no matter what I become, I'm always the only one in his heart." Daisy tapped the table with her fingers. Since Jessica just magically showed up here, she wanted to cut to the heart of the matter, and find out if Hank and Jessica really had a connection with each other and planned to cooperate with each other as she had predicted.

What does it have anything to do with me if he is in trouble now? I don't know anyone named Hank, so why do you say he has my back? So what if you're happy? What is it to me? Why should I care? Do you think I will envy you? Don't forget that Edward once belonged to me, he was my man." Jessica looked evasive. That Damn Hank, he failed to carry out the plan as she had anticipated, moreover, he dared to threaten her. He had underestimated Jessica. She would not be afraid of this useless man.

Oh! Since you have mentioned that he once belonged to you. You said 'once.' So it was a fling in the past. And I don't really care about what happened in the past. But you really don't know Hank? Then it's so strange. Did I mishear this morning? I'm sorry, my life has been too sweet recently and sometimes I get lost in thought. Otherwise I would not have misheard this morning that Hank mentioned something like he had a one-night affair with the daughter of the CEO of Lin Group."

Daisy scratched her hair and pretended to be innocent. She was playing the trick of pretending to be as weak as a pig, luring the tiger to her trap and getting the prey. She didn't believe that Jessica wouldn't care when she talked about how happy she was with Edward. Daisy knew Jessica was deeply obsessed with Edward, so after Jessica heard Daisy's remarks, she would certainly become very annoyed. Then Daisy would see whether she would lose her composure and fall into her trap.

Chapter 477: Chapter 477: Sleeping Around

"People talk. If I took every rumor seriously, I'd have no time to eat or sleep. That's the life of us rich and famous ladies. Everyone brags and gossips about us, and wishes their lives are somehow connected with us. How many of them do you think are telling the truth?" Jessica said. Then she thought, 'Humph! Daisy, you want to anger me? In your dreams! It might be a good plan, but I'm not as stupid as Mary, who gets irritated easily by a few words of yours.'

"I'm not from a wealthy family, maybe I was wrong, but there's no smoke without fire. Sometimes the truth emerges after someone stirs things up. Isn't that the favorite trick of the so-called upper-class?"

Daisy's eyelids drooped, as if she was staring at the coffee mug, but she stole a glance at those hostile women every now and then.

You seem to have a problem with the upper-class. Do you think it is appropriate to hate rich people so much, as the wife of the CEO of FX International Group?" Coco held Daisy responsible for her being shut out of entertainment business by Edward, because she thought if Daisy hadn't showed up in Edward's life, he wouldn't have dumped her cousin Jessica, and things would have been different. She would have remained a superstar in the spotlight.

I have never hated rich people. Being rich or poor depends on your attitude, that is, how much you think is enough. I never force myself to work for money. I'm contented with a comfortable, happy life. By the way, we've never met. Do you think it is appropriate to talk with me in that tone?"

Daisy didn't recall she had offended this pretty woman.

Gee, how embarrassing! You don't even recognize Coco, an international superstar. What a hillbilly! Don't ever tell anyone you're an Ouyang. You're a shame to that name." Now that other people were here, Mary wasn't afraid of Daisy anymore. She sneered at her and started to humiliate her as much as she could.

"Why should I know her? I'm not a teenager who spends every waking hour keeping up with her favorite stars. And I'm not a silly girl chasing meaningless things. As for the name Ouyang, I wish it had nothing to do with my life. So stop pretending it is an honorable name, you make me want to puke."

Daisy didn't care if her family background was revealed. She wasn't worried about what kind of verbal attack might come at her next. No one had ever scared her in her entire life. At this moment she faced her enemies bravely.

Interesting. Daisy, as I recall I asked you last time whether you knew Mary or not, you said no. But from the current situation, apparently you know each other. Any explanations?" Jessica was intrigued by the topic and laughed. She forgot all about the problems her company faced.

I don't know her, but she is dying to get into my life. What can I do? Besides, it is my private life, why should I tell you about it?" Daisy seldom smiled, but today a faint smile lingered on her mouth all the time. She remained calm, making it impossible to figure out what she was thinking or how she was feeling.

That's a load of crap! Since when did I try to do anything regarding you? I would not see you again if you didn't try to ruin my parents' relationship and break up my family!" Mary thought she would get the upper hand with Jessica and Coco on her side. She was trying everything to get back at Daisy for the embarrassing situation she had put her in just now.

Jessica, it's getting more and more interesting, isn't it? It turns out Colonel Ouyang likes being a home wrecker. What a special hobby! I wonder why she fell in love with Mr. Ouyang instead of Edward who is handsome and distinguished. This is the most hilarious joke I've heard this year."

Humph! Daisy had said she didn't know Coco, who had been a household name in the city. As a person who was used to flattery and fame, naturally Coco couldn't tolerate such contempt. In addition, both she and Daisy had that aloof bearing, but Edward had fallen in love with Daisy instead of her and never paid any attention to her, which deepened her resentment toward Daisy.

"Since you think it's a joke, I will just laugh at it and will overlook the fact that you just insulted my sister," A male voice said, disturbing everyone. He handily disrupted their scheming. They all looked up to find a handsome lively young man smiling mischievously. He was standing right next to them.

Brian, what brought you here?" Seeing Brian, Daisy was very excited. The cold expression on her face turned into a smile full of tenderness. She was so happy that she had totally forgotten they were not alone. Their closeness made the rest jealous.

Isn't it wonderful? I was thinking of you, then here you are, in front of me. It seems that there's really a strong connection between us. Are you happy to see me?"

Brian bent over and kissed Daisy's cheek gently. Then his eyes swept the others. When they met Mary's eyes, a cold, cunning smile flitted over his face.

It seems Colonel Ouyang really sleeps around. We've just heard she is having an affair with Mr. Ouyang, now she's being intimate in public with this man who obviously is merely a pretty face. I wonder what Edward sees in such a slut!"

Jessica said viciously, jealous of and disgusted by the intimacies between Daisy and Brian, but as soon as she finished those vulgar words, a loud smack fell on her cheek. It was so hard she felt herself deaf shortly. She gazed at the young man who had hit her in astonishment.

"Stupid woman, I don't care who you are or who is behind you. I'll hit you again if you say anything like that. It doesn't matter what you say about me, but you shouldn't have used that filthy language on my sister. This is the first time I have hit a woman, I hope it is the last time. But it won't be if you insult her again.

Brian wasn't a man keen on fixing problems through violence. But Jessica's words enraged him enormously. He would have let go if she had only insulted him, but she had made a huge mistake when she said Daisy, the woman he respected most, was a slut. He wouldn't put up with it, so he slapped her without thinking. Some people deserved to be hit.

"What's wrong with you? Why did you hit my cousin? She was telling the truth! Do you think we're blind? Clearly there's something going on between you two." Coco collected herself from the shock and glared at Brian.

"Your eyes are fine, but you have foul souls. Who says siblings can't be affectionate? Is that a law made by your family?"

Brian had a character similar to Rain's. They both liked giving evil smiles. Right now he acted like a hooligan.

"Brian, are you out of your mind? Daisy doesn't have anything to do with us. Don't forget I'm your sister. That woman is nobody." Mary hated being ignored. She shared the same mother with Brian, but he was never close to her. Instead, he was always protecting Daisy and behaved affectionately toward her in front of Mary. She couldn't take it anymore.

"Blpph! Mary, did you get kicked in the head? You have forgotten everything I told you. I have only one sister and that is Daisy. You? You don't deserve to be anybody's sister. I'll deal with you about what happened today at home. I warned you not to bother Daisy again. But you not only didn't listen to me but also allied yourself with these loose women and humiliated her. What should I do with you? Huh?"

Brian gave a bigger smile. In truth he didn't just bump into Daisy. He had called her up and Mark told him that she was here. So he had come to see her, but only to find that several women were bullying her. He couldn't help getting involved.

"Watch your damn mouth! Who were you referring to as loose women?" Coco warned. She was pompous and wouldn't stand anybody talking about her like that.

"Whoever responds to it. I never mentioned a name." Brian smiled evilly and glanced at Coco with his eyebrows raised. Another disgusting, pretentious woman pretending to be innocent and noble.

"You say Daisy is your sister and Mary says she is your sister too. Is Daisy a member of the Ouyangs? But why did I never hear about her? Is she a bastard?"

Jessica asked Brian with her hand on her cheek. It still stung, and was turning red. That was the question on her mind. But her eyes were fixed on Daisy resentfully. Why did everyone love her? Both her in-laws and the others around her. Why was she so perfect in their eyes that they were willing to do everything to protect her.

Chapter 478: Chapter 478: The Princess Of Ouyang Family (part one)

"Bastard? Are you talking about yourself? My sister is the real princess of Ouyang Family. She is a pure Ouyang but never shows off. Oh, talking about showing off, one of us is clearly inferior. She goes around showing off, proclaiming she's highborn when she's not. Oh my God, I'm so sick of it."

Brian had a sharp wit. Not only was he making fun of Mary, but he skewered all the upper class people with their noses in the air, who were mean simply because they're rotten people. He had a discerning eye, and regarded them as inferiors.

You lie! How could she be the princess of Ouyang Family. If she really is, why have I never seen her at those grand cocktail parties? She doesn't even attend any social activities. Are you trying to confuse us?"

In Jessica Lin's opinion, Daisy Ouyang had been, was, and always would be a woman of humble birth. It was a fact that could never be changed, even if she was a colonel, an invaluable military officer. So she always had a condescending manner. The only advantage she had was the higher-class blood that flowed in her veins. But what was Brian saying now? That Daisy Ouyang was the princess of Ouyang Family! If that were true, then Jessica's advantage was gone. After all, Ouyang Foreign Trade was as large as Lin Group.

"Hum! Do you think I'm the kind who always claims to be related to others? Of course my sister is the princess. Oh, it depends on whether she's willing to claim she is a member of Ouyang Family or not. Do you know Cheng Financial Group? It was a consortium that belonged to Daisy's grandfather on her mother's side. It's the predecessor of Ouyang Foreign Trade."

At first, Brian didn't know the history of Ouyang Foreign Trade. After the cocktail party of FX International Group, he made some further inquiries and found out that it had been a consortium of Daisy's grandfather of her mother's side. It had been quite prosperous for its time before it became Ouyang Foreign Trade. But it somehow spiraled downward after his father took over and changed the name.

Brian, don't talk nonsense. What is this Cheng Financial Group? I've never heard of it." Mary grew flustered first. If Brian was telling the truth that Ouyang Foreign Trade was the heritage of Daisy's grandfather of her mother's side, she would lose everything.

Because in that case, no matter how much Leo Ouyang loved her and how luxurious a life she lived, everything she had would all be owed to Daisy, and she'd have to depend on Daisy for support. All the things such as fame, money and status Leo Ouyang owned were gained from Daisy's side. She would always live in Daisy's shadow. It was unacceptable to her.

Daisy didn't comment on what Brian said. She just frowned for an instant. She chose to keep silent because she couldn't tell how much she could trust him due to his mocking smile. So she concluded that he was just exaggerating the facts in order to vindicate her honor.

Jessica and Coco stared at each other in consternation. They had heard their family mention Cheng Financial Group. But they didn't know whether it was the predecessor of Ouyang Foreign Trade or not. After all, the Chengs were a rich family, the head was a business tycoon at that time. Cheng's power at that time equaled (or was even greater than) FX International Group today. So they never imagined relating it to Ouyang Foreign Trade, a large or just medium sized company.

It doesn't matter if you've never heard of it. Well, now you know. So don't forget one thing; you're enjoying a charmed life because of Daisy instead of Leo Ouyang. And you'd better stop showing off and being arrogant. Next to her, you're nothing but a little person, which you used to deride in the past."

Brian never considered Ouyang Foreign Trade as some powerful company. He didn't value it and wasn't interested in it at all. He had his own goals and ambitions, and he was forging his own path in business. It wouldn't be long before he developed a more powerful enterprise.

Why should I do that? Brian. Why are you protecting her? So you have nothing but good things to say about Daisy, but you mock me! I AM your sister, not her! Oh, you'd better keep this in mind too; if I'm little person, you are too! After all, we have the same mother." Mary got more and more agitated. How could it be? For all these years, she had been moving in high society and trying to get acknowledged. She thought she had behaved well because she always treated her behaviors seriously no matter what. She had considered herself to be the true princess. Now what Brian said broke her tender heart. But why couldn't she shed her humble birth at last?

"Oh, thanks for the reminder. But I don't need it because I've never considered myself noble. As you know, I never show off and always keep a low profile. The so-called upper-class life in your words is way beyond my reach." Brian picked up Daisy' coffee and took a sip. He gave Daisy a thumbs up, conveying that the coffee tasted good and she must have a deep understanding about coffee.

Well, well, well! What an intimate picture..." Coco lifted her eyebrows and laughed disdainfully at Daisy. She didn't care about everyone else's opinions of Daisy. All she wanted was to find every opportunity to tease and embarrass Daisy and her alone.

For sure. I saw it too. Although Jessica's face was still slightly red and swollen, it was not as serious as Daisy's face had been yesterday. Probably because Brian hadn't slapped her with much strength. You'd hardly notice it. Jessica grew quite jealous at the sight of Brian sipping the coffee and getting along well with Daisy. It was totally an eyesore for her. She felt that Brian and Daisy were so close, so in sync, that no could keep them apart. She couldn't figure out how she felt about it either. Envy or admiration? She didn't know.

Daisy didn't say anything. Her slight and indifferent smile resting on her mouth made it difficult for others to read her mind. It seemed that they were not talking about her but others. She seemed to be lost in her world.

Chapter 479: Chapter 479: The Princess Of Ouyang Family (part two)

"Intimate? I don't think so. There is only one reason for your dirty mind; you have a problem understanding others. It looks like that we are on different mental levels because I am far smarter than you."

Brian had been abroad, and hadn't been back in the country for long. So he didn't know the two aggressive women. But he would never miss the opportunity to speak up for Daisy without hesitation as long as someone, no matter who they were, talked badly of her. No matter how powerful their family might be, he would always be on Daisy's side. Daisy was the most important person in his mind.

"Hey boy! Is this the family education of Ouyang? Watch your manners. How can you be so rude talking with your elders?" Coco disliked Brian's easy smile. Also, she hated it when he made fun of her intelligence because she had done terrible in school. Else she wouldn't have decided to give up on university and be an actress. It was a sensitive topic for her.

"Colonel, Mr. Mu's calling." The moment Brian was about to move his lips and retort, Mark suddenly walked in and passed the phone to Daisy respectfully.

"Hello! This is Daisy." Daisy believed it was hard to tell whether someone in a manner matched their family education or not. Just examining the words would be not enough. Actions speak louder than words. So she just turned a deaf ear to them.

"Honey, are you busy at work?" Edward had been waiting for quite a long time, but he didn't see his little woman. So he got the phone from Luke and made the call. He didn't mean to nag her. He was just a little worried.

"Oh, a little bit. But I'm already back in town. Are you feeling okay now?" Daisy frowned for an instant. She had wanted to go to the hospital as early as possible, but her original plan was disturbed by these shrews who asked for trouble. It was already so late now!

"I'm good. Take care and don't worry." Though he had round the clock care, he couldn't stop missing her all day. He didn't know if it was because he had been wounded or if he loved her that much. Maybe a lot of both. That's why he missed her so much.

Yes! I see. I'll get right back to your hospital suite as soon as I finish up. Don't worry about me." Daisy comforted Edward softly. Daisy's gentle voice seemed to be a flea in Jessica's ear. There seemed to be fire burning in her heart. She felt so heartbroken. Oh, Edward, what a proud man! When did he care about her like this? Even during the time when they were getting well along, he didn't make any phone calls to show he cared. But now he worried about and loved Daisy Ouyang so much. How could she not hate him?

"I'm not worried. I'm just missing you." Edward had already become an old hand at saying those sweet words. Unlike the former Edward, he didn't refrain from showing his love for Daisy at all. He was sure about one thing; all his love, gentleness and tenderness belonged to Daisy and he would never be stingy with them. He would take advantage of every opportunity to care for and love Daisy.

"I miss you too. Bye." Just then, both Daisy's ears and delicate face flushed all of a sudden. She looked so cute and gorgeous.

"Wow." Brian always showed his angry face to those women who made fun of Daisy. But now he whistled to encourage Daisy when he heard her express her love to Edward so boldly.

"Brian, I need to go now. Are you coming with?" Daisy passed the phone back to Mark. She felt a little shy about his whistling. But she had already get used to it because she could always hear such whistles in the military. So she didn't mind it at all.

"Of course I'll go with you. I'd have to be insane to hang out with these old hags. It's a waste of my time." Brian was never afraid of abusing and offending people when he was speaking. He was somewhat like Belinda in this respect. Both of them were very blunt and direct.

"Then let's go!" Daisy smiled. Of course it would be a waste of time staying with them. What's more, it was torture talking to women who thought too much of themselves.

"Daisy Ouyang, wait, what's wrong with Edward?" Jessica overheard Daisy mention something about a hospital, and she was worried. Edward didn't love her, but she still had feelings for him. So she became quite anxious, afraid something had happened to Edward. Seeing Daisy turn to leave, she reached out to grab her hand. But Mark stepped in her way.

Sorry, miss. Watch your manners, please. The Colonel doesn't like it when someone approaches her like that. Please keep your distance." Mark was quite familiar with Jessica Lin. He had stopped her from slapping Daisy in the face last time, he was supposed to do the same this time. He didn't know the history between Mr. Mu and her, but he would never allow her hurt his colonel.

"You again! Are you a dog? Why are you always following her?" Jessica had only concentrated on the words 'Mr. Mu's calling' when Mark came in just now. She hadn't paid much attention to other things. But now seeing Mark standing in front of her, she recognized him as the guy who grabbed her hand when she was about to slap Daisy.

"Sorry, no! I'm a dragon, not a dog. But how kind of you to ask about my birthday. Oh, what's more, I'm colonel's accompanying officer, namely her bodyguard. I'm in charge of her daily life and safety. So it's reasonable that I am always following her.

Mark explained in a serious manner. His words, together with his good natured expression were so funny. If they were not in the wrong place at the wrong time, Brian would burst into laughter at what he saw now. Mark look like a good natured man, but he actually insulted Jessica. What he said was damn ironic! He mocked her without a single dirty word.
