

The Amazing Son In Law (Charlie Wade)

Chapter 2933-2934

When Matilda heard Ziva Hank's remarks, she nodded in agreement, and smiled: "It's really hard to meet people with similar life experiences. Of course, there will be more common languages."

Matilda spoke this sentence from the bottom of his heart.

In her life, she has experienced no ups and downs, but it has also gone through ups and downs.

Go abroad, emigrate, get married, have children, be widowed, and then choose to return to the roots with the children and return to the country.

This short sentence represents her life experience of more than 50 years.

What's interesting is that Hank's experience is almost exactly the same as hers.

Hank also decided to return to China after his wife died.

Originally, Matilda thought that the difference between him and herself was that he had returned by himself and the child was still abroad. Today, when she suddenly saw Ziva Hank, she realized that Hank's child had also returned.

To be honest, it was so coincidental that Matilda thought it was looking in the mirror, but in some places it was the opposite. For example, Hank was a male and had a daughter, and he was a female and had a son.

Therefore, when she saw Ziva Hank, she was a little more cordial, so she smiled and said, "Ziva Hank, my son just came to China with me. I have the opportunity to introduce you to me. I believe you and him will have a lot of common language. ."

Ziva Hank smiled slightly, nodded, and said politely: "Okay Aunt Matilda."

Seeing this, Hank hurriedly said: "Oh! Matilda, how about that? I will cook some dishes at home tomorrow night. You will bring Paul to come over and let the two children get to know you. What do you think? "

Matilda thought for a while and said, "Well, I'm not sure yet. I will ask Paul when I get home."

Hank hurriedly said, "Okay! If Paul has time, just tell me directly, and I'll start preparing."

Matilda nodded, looked at the time, and said: "Okay, I won't talk to you for now, some old guys over there are still waiting."

After finishing speaking, she waved her hand to Charlie and said, "Charlie, if you have time to sit at home, Paul keeps talking about you, saying that the person he admires most is you."

Charlie smiled and said politely: "Good Auntie , I must go if I have time."

Matilda smiled slightly, and said to Ziva Hank: "Ziva Hank, auntie is leaving first, and I will take my son to visit your house when I look back."

Ziva Hank said with a sweet smile: "Good Aunt Matilda, go slowly."

When Matilda left, Charlie didn't delay any more, and said to Hank and Ziva Hank, "Let's get in the car too."

"Okay." Hank responded, and then got into the commercial vehicle.

After everyone got on the bus, Charlie asked the driver to go to the villa area where Hank lived.

On the way, Ziva Hank couldn't help but ask Hank with a look of gossip: "Dad, are you interesting to that Aunt Matilda?"

Hank became embarrassed all of a sudden, and said falteringly: "You kid, what are you talking about..."

Ziva Hank curled his lips: "I really should be a three-year-old kid? It's just such a thing, can I still see it?"

As she said, she said with a serious face: "I have a good impression of this Aunt Matilda. I have never seen an aunt with such a temperament and cultivation like her, and more importantly, she is very friendly. like."

"Really?!" Hank was pleasantly surprised when he heard this, and blurted out: "Do you really think your Aunt Matilda is good?"
