

Soo Yin took a deep breath because Gong Yoo had awakened the sleeping lion's emotions. Then she turned to look at Dae Hyun's face, which had started to turn red from holding back his anger.

"Okay, let me explain everything so that there are no more misunderstandings. Dae Hyun and I do have a relationship..." Soo Yin stopped her speech because suddenly Gong Yoo's cell phone rang.

"Wait a minute," said Gong Yoo who got up and walked away from the table to answer the phone.

Soo Yin took another sip of her drink. Felt relieved that the misunderstanding would soon be over. She will also ask Gong Yoo not to interfere in her affairs.

"Sorry, we'll talk again next time because I have a lot of business," said Gong Yoo regretfully because he had to go back to the hotel for work.

"Wait, sir." Soo Yin was about to forbid him from leaving but it was a shame because Gong Yoo had already left the cafe.

"Unfortunately, before it's done he already left," she muttered.

"Hyo Rin, where are you going after this?" Soo Yin said while watching Gong Yoo's back which was slowly moving away from the cafe.

Dae Hyun's chest then rumbled as he was following the direction of Soo Yin's gaze who was still looking at Gong Yoo.

"Geez, I forgot that I have to meet Ji Sang. I better go now," said Hyo Rin while patting her forehead.

"Sorry, everyone." With hurried steps Hyo Rin immediately left the cafe.

Soo Yin turned to her husband who was silent after Gong Yoo and Hyo Rin left the cafe.

"You said you wanted to take me somewhere, let's go now," said Soo Yin with a happy face. Curious where Dae Hyun will take her to go.

"Hmmm," said Dae Hyun as he stood up and then walked ahead of Soo Yin.

Dae Hyun's steps were too wide, making Soo Yin a little overwhelmed and limping to keep up with his steps.

"What's wrong with him? Looks like he's not in a good mood. It's impossible for men to have their periods," muttered Soo Yin who chose to slow down instead of having to chase Dae Hyun who was already across the road to his car. If he didn't want to wait, let him be.

"It's really hard to have a husband who goes through a second puberty," Soo Yin grumbled. She didn't care if her husband was angry and nagging.

Dae Hyun was already behind the wheel but Soo Yin sat on the bench instead. Yet he was waiting for her to arrive quickly.

"Geez, what is she doing there? She said she wanted to leave immediately," Dae Hyun grumbled with a long sigh.

Dae Hyun had been waiting for five minutes but Soo Yin did not move from her seat. He was forced and was holding back the emotions that had been bubbling for a long time, Dae Hyun finally decided to get out of the car and then walked over to where Soo Yin was sitting.

Soo Yin pretended to be indifferent and didn't know if her husband was coming. She knew that Dae Hyun was still emotional. That was why it was better for them not to be together for a while.

Soo Yin realized that she was very bad and easily emotional too.

Dae Hyun who did not get a direct response lifted Soo Yin's body with both hands.

"What are you doing?" Soo Yin screamed when she felt her body suddenly float in the air. She looked around, fortunately the condition of the campus was getting quiet. Only a few people passed by.

Dae Hyun was silent without answering Soo Yin's question. He kept on walking with a straight forward view.

After arriving at his car, he put Soo Yin down and put her in the front passenger.

Soo Yin rubbed her heart, which got a heart attack at what her husband was doing. Luckily she was wearing trousers.

"Are you mad again?" said Soo Yin while squinting at Dae Hyun who was driving.

"No," said Dae Hyun curtly.

"If you're mad, just say it, don't hold it in because I won't know it. I'm not a psychic who can read minds," Soo Yin said as she folded her arms across her chest. Wanted to know how far her husband would stand and keep quiet.

Dae Hyun put on a cold face, not wanting to respond to Soo Yin's words. She felt like wanting to get angry because Soo Yin was insensitive.

Not getting a response from her husband, Soo Yin chose to take a book out of her bag. Instead of thinking about her husband who was angry, it was better to study her subjects.

Dae Hyun glanced at Soo Yin while putting on a sour face. Even though he wanted Soo Yin to persuade him not to be angry anymore. But what he got was not what he wanted. His wife was actually very indifferent.

"Is the book more important than your husband?" Finally Dae Hyun couldn't stand it so he spoke up.

"Are you done getting angry?" Soo Yin lowered the book from in front of her face.

Dae Hyun didn't answer because he was too proud to admit everything.

"Tell me what makes you angry?" Soo Yin insisted. Her eyes fixed on Dae Hyun's face for him to tell the truth.

"The way you looked at him was very different," Dae Hyun accused flatly.

Soo Yin opened her mouth, gawking at the answer from her husband. What did he actually mean by a different way of looking at him? She didn't even feel any difference in looking at someone.

"What do you mean?" Soo Yin said while rolling her eyes. If she faced Dae Hyun when he was childish like that, she would probably die young.

"The way you look at Gong Yoo is very different. The look in your eyes seems to imply something.." Dae Hyun repeated his words with a sour face.