

Burning Love What If I Never Get Over You

Chapter 27 Leaving The Hospital Alone

Ines put on a strong facade and said to Jarred quietly, "Jarred, you should stay with Cheryl in the hospital. Even though there are doctors and nurses here, she still needs you. I can take a taxi home..." Jarred gave Cheryl a guilty look and said, "Cheryl, I will come back to you after I send her home." Cheryl had been defeated. Jarred asked the doctor to come to the ward and left with Ines. Cheryl stared blankly at their receding backs. She felt like a waterlogged sponge was blocking her throat. She couldn't breathe or make a sound. Once again, Jarred had been tender towards her to make her lower her guard, then he had mercilessly left her to wallow in endless loneliness. Cheryl laughed at herself.

Ines had made her lose her mind. How could she fight jealousy for his favor? Jarred would always choose Ines over her. The doctor frowned as he looked down at her. "This is strange. You shouldn't be in pain anymore." Cheryl came to herself and smiled apologetically. "I'm sorry. My husband misunderstood me just now. If I feel fine, can I leave the hospital?"

The doctor didn't let Cheryl leave the hospital until she received a thorough examination.

Cheryl went through the discharge formalities alone.

As soon as she turned her back, the nurses at the front desk whispered excitedly to each other.

"Her husband sent her here. When they arrived, I envied her for marrying such a handsome and considerate man." "But her husband just left with another woman, and now she is leaving the hospital alone. I feel sorry for her..."

"Don't judge people by their looks. A handsome man may still be scum."

Cheryl stopped walking. Her long hair slid down her shoulders and covered her face. A single tear fell from her eye.

Cheryl took a taxi back to the River Villa.

Gertie hurried over to her as soon as she entered the yard. "Ma'am, why did you come back alone?" she asked worriedly. "Have you recovered? Do you feel better?" "Gertie..." Cheryl's tense face finally crumbled. She hugged Gertie and cried silently.

Gertie had worked for the Fuller family for many years. Ever since she married into the Fuller family, the other servants often looked down on Cheryl. Only Gertie was always on her side. Later, all of the gossipy servants found themselves fired. Gertie managed the River Villa almost completely alone. She had witnessed the relationship between Cheryl and Jarred change from harmony to discord and dissolution. Gertie patted Cheryl on the back gently. When Cheryl stopped crying, Gertie told her, "Godfrey is waiting for you in the living room."

Startled, Cheryl wiped her tears and asked, "Has he been waiting for a long time?" Godfrey Wolfe was Yates' butler and confidant. He seldom left the Fuller family's mansion.

He probably arrived at the River Villa so suddenly because Yates knew that Cheryl had been hospitalized.

"He arrived half an hour ago."

Cheryl nodded and walked to the living room. Godfrey gave Cheryl an amiable smile.

“Ma’am, are you still feeling pain? Mr. Yates Fuller is very worried about you. His private doctor has come with me. Will you let him check on you again?” Cheryl felt warmth in her heart. “I’m fine. Don’t bother the doctor.” Godfrey talked with her for a long time, telling Cheryl what Yates had said. Cheryl listened carefully and smiled. Yates also asked Godfrey to bring a lot of vitamins, enough to almost cover the whole table in the living room. There was one last thing Godfrey brought up before he left. “Mr. Yates Fuller invited you and Mr. Jarred Fuller to have lunch at the Fuller family’s mansion tomorrow.” “Okay, I’ll tell Jarred.” After seeing Godfrey off, Cheryl dialed Jarred’s number. When the phone was answered, Cheryl heard Ines’ relaxed voice. “Cheryl? What’s the matter?”
