

Burning Love What If I Never Get Over You

Chapter 34 The Fuller Family Will Ditch You

The grey suit jacket slid to the ground due to Cheryl's frantic efforts to break free. However, her little strength was absolutely no match for a guy who was both tall and muscular. "Earlier, you criticized my sister for her brazen pursuit of a married guy. This is a great opportunity for us to find out what could happen to a married woman like you who hooks up with another man!" Chuck pulled Cheryl into a dark nook, his jaws clenched in exasperation. Cheryl's face blanched with fear. "Are you out of your dn mind? The Fuller family won't let you get away with this!"

"Sorry to burst your bubble, princess, but I fear the Fuller family will ditch you right after you bring them shame." Chuck grinned maniacally and caressed her face. In her desperation, Cheryl slapped Chuck across the face with her bare hand.

She smacked him with such force that they could hear it distinctly.

Chuck's face instantly became crimson and swelled up.

For a brief while, her gesture astounded him. A few seconds later, he gently turned around and looked at Cheryl with eyes that were even more vicious. "You crazy bh!" Chuck screamed angrily and slammed Cheryl against the wall.

"Ah!"

Suddenly, Cheryl lost her footing and was left with no choice but to shield her belly. However, she didn't feel anything and was not harmed in any way. Instead, Cheryl found herself enveloped in a loving hug. She was surprised to see gentle eyes staring back at her when she glanced up.

The stranger's strong arms supported Cheryl.

The man was an impressive figure in height and strength. He was dressed entirely in black, including his shirt, pants, mask, and cap, which he used to conceal his identity.

"Who the fk are you? Mind your own goddamn business!"

Chuck made his way over and grabbed Cheryl by the shoulders. But the guy grabbed his wrist and twisted it hard before he could reach Cheryl.

This caused Chuck to writhe in anguish and cry out, "It hurts!" It didn't take long for the guy, who seemed unfazed by Chuck's plight, to kick him in the chest. Chuck was thrown to the ground, and the man went on to hurl him to the wall. That whole incident went by much too quickly! The moment Cheryl regained her wits, Chuck had already fallen to the ground and was wailing in agony. "Mrs. Fuller!" When the driver finally arrived, he was shocked to see Cheryl. "Are you all right?" The driver was relieved to see Cheryl nod her head, even if she was still rattled up. Cheryl smiled and said sincerely, "Thank you," as she turned to face the strange guy. But the man remained silent. He pulled down the brim of his cap to completely cover his eyes.

His long, slender fingers were especially noticeable as he moved his hand.

"Thank you, sir, for your prompt help. We'll be sure to thank you for your efforts..." The driver expressed his sincere gratitude by bowing formally.

However, the man turned around and walked away without saying anything before the driver could finish his sentence.

His broad, et back seemed rather cold for no apparent reason.

Cheryl was taken aback by what she saw. She mulled over, 'This man... He is warm-hearted despite his chilly exterior.' In the meantime, Chuck had already fled the scene.

“I will let Mr. Fuller know what happened and track down that thug who attacked you,” the driver exclaimed petulantly. An unidentifiable emotion darkened Cheryl’s eyes that they were almost black. “You don’t have to tell him.” What difference would it make if Jarred knew? He would most certainly convince Cheryl to let go of Ines if the latter intervened. In the end, Cheryl would be the lone victim of torment here. After grabbing the suit jacket from the ground, Cheryl climbed back inside the car after the driver pulled up in front of her. They drove off as soon as she was safely strapped in. While Cheryl’s vision of the fountain slowly faded away, Chuck’s words lingered in her head. Jarred captivated Cheryl’s attention from when they first met, and she remained smitten with him for over a decade. Despite this, Ines was the only one Jarred ever cared about. as Soon

After three years of marriage, Jarred had never uttered “I love you” to Cheryl because of Ines.

Rate this Chapter