

CEO is Chasing Ex-Wife Back Chapter 3

Chapter 3 Mr. Buchanna Will Never See You

Fifteen minutes later, in the police station.

After Aurora finished recording the statement, she sat in the chair waiting. She waited for two hours, but Zac never came. His lawyer came instead.

The lawyer put down his briefcase, sat opposite Aurora, and handed a few documents to her, "Ms. Bennet, Mr. Buchanna said that if you sign this divorce agreement, he will give you the apartment in Northern Lake Hill."

The lawyer was polite but cold.

The phrase divorce agreement on the document stung Aurora's eyes.

She suddenly smiled. Zac was so impatient.

Seeing that she didn't sign the paper, the lawyer took out a few more documents from the file bag and handed them to Aurora, "This is the detailed information about Mr.

Buchanna's and your personal property. You don't have common property. The apartment in Northern Lake Hill was given to you out of the kindness of Mr. Buchanna."

"In addition, this is the division of shares that Mr. Buchanna made a year ago. The debt of the Bennet Group is completely on you. The Buchanna Group does not have the responsibility."

Aurora saw a series of information among which shares, real estate, credit cards, and so on were clearly stated.

Aurora's heart turned cold. She finally understood that this was all planned by Zac. He calculated so well, so deeply.

He planned it out without missing a single detail.

Zac was smart, or Aurora's father wouldn't choose him to be Aurora's husband two years ago.

He created the Buchanna Financial Group at a young age and it became the leading industry in Berchun City.

Her father had chosen a good husband for Aurora. Zac was young and handsome and had the courage and amazing business mind. He had built his business empire in just a few years from his bankrupt family

Though the Bennet family went bankrupt, his interest was not hurt.

Could father have thought of today?

Zac's shrewdness made Aurora afraid, and also made her heart cold.

He didn't even tell Aurora in person that he wanted a divorce, leaving Aurora no room to struggle.

Aurora clenched her fists and forced herself to calm down. She put the documents on the table. "Where is Zac?"

"Mr. Buchanna is picking a wedding dress for his fiancée. I will represent him in divorce affairs. You can ask me anything about that."

"I only want to see Zac. I don't even want the apartment. I only want to see him." Aurora raised her head and looked at the young lawyer who spoke flawlessly.

"I'm sorry, Miss Aurora. He will never see you," the lawyer repeated.

"OK."

Aurora sneered as if everything was within her expectations. She closed the document and pinched her palm, “Then I will never sign this divorce agreement. If he dares to marry Wenny, then I will sue him for bigamy.”

“Ms. Bennet!”

The lawyer wanted to persuade Aurora, but seeing the sadness and determination in Aurora’s eyes, he was speechless.

“Zac wants a legal marriage with Wenny, right? So, where is he now?” Aurora asked coldly.

The lawyer pondered and told the truth, “Mr. Buchanna will meet the CEO of Phoenix Real Estate in Creek Club at 7 o’clock tonight. Ms. Bennet, I will arrange for you after Mr. Buchanna’s discussion ends...”

“No need.” Aurora coldly interrupted, “There are some things that only Zac and I can resolve.”
