

CEO's Unexpected Wife by Charlie

Chapter 15

Chapter 15

Leopold put away the bag and small change handed over by the cashier, pointed to the leisure area outside, and said, "Really? Let's go outside and find somewhere for a chat."

Soon, they casually sat down at a table.

Facing the mentor who gave her a rare opportunity, Elaine told him the good news she had just received, "Mr. Jasmin, I passed the audition for the The Arrival of the Empress!"

Hearing that, Leopold was bewildered. Then the astonishment in his eyes faded away, and he sincerely said to her, "Congratulations. I knew you would make it."

Last night, he received a call from his friend, who said that he had been originally very satisfied with Elaine, however, as an investor asked to assign the role to another person. Now Elaine actually said she passed the audition? Had things turned around?

"Thank you!"

Elaine smiled brightly, unscrewed the lid of the bottle, and took a sip.

Leopold was in a daze for a moment as he looked at her delicate and beautiful face under the light.

Since the day she entered the campus, he had been destined to be unable to look away.

He saw her diligence, kindness, and modesty. Even though he had known that the teacher-student relationship would prevent him from getting closer to her, he had been willing to stay in the Acting Department without seeking other opportunities of development.

"Mr. Jasmin, what are you thinking about?" She waved her hand in front of him.

Leopold came back to his senses and quickly looked away. He coughed to hide the embarrassment, "Ahem, Elaine, heard that you have broken up with your boyfriend?"

The last words he spoke meant to seek the confirmation.

Hearing that, she gave a small twisted smile, and nodded, "Yes."

She hadn't expected it to be spread so quickly. Was it because her classmates had seen that she and Chris had an argument at the college gate?

With her confirmation, he felt a faint joy in his heart, but he pretended to be regretful and said, "I'm sorry, I just heard it from someone, so..."

She shook her head with a smile, "It doesn't matter. There are on and off in a love affair. Breaking up is not shameful."

What was embarrassing was Chris' relationship with that girl!

Hearing that, he nodded in relief, "Now you have a rare opportunity. If you really want to enter that circle, you should focus on your career. I will support you wholeheartedly."

After all, he had been already daydreaming about something.

"Well, thank you, Mr. Jasmin."

After a brief chat, she returned to her dormitory. She had been depressed by the breakup and rejection of the audition, as there was such a reversal, she was wild with joy.

When she sat down in front of the computer, she suddenly thought of something. She picked up her phone, found a number in her address book, and hesitantly dialed it out.

In a spacious and silent conference room in the Proeperous Group building, the executives in formal dresses from various departments reported the recent profits one by one.

As the newly appointed president always kept a serious look. Even sitting there, his coolness and simple dignity made the others do their best so as not to provoke him.

"Buzzing."

Ian, the assistant standing behind Issac, sensed that the phone in his hand was vibrating.

It was Issac's private number. Usually, if someone called this number, it might be his important kinsfolk.

Thinking of that, Ian did not dare to hold up. Then he walked to his side, bent down, and said in a low voice, "Mr. Tod're wanted on the phone."

Issac looked briefly at the caller ID, then gestured to the employee who was reporting to stop, and his hand slid over the answer icon.

"Hello."

"It's me, Elaine."

There was a familiar and pleasant female voice at the other end of the phone.

"Yes."

Though his face was expressionless, his voice softened.

"Are you busy now?" She asked in a gentle voice with some caution.

Issac paused slightly as he opened the document. Unconsciously, he replied with a faint smile, "No, what's wrong?"

She was relieved and said, "Well, I just want to tell you I have passed the audition I mentioned last night."

As Issac had asked her about it at dinner last night, she wanted to inform him as soon as she got the good news.

Issac raised his eyebrows and said, "Really? Congratulations."

It seemed that Thomas was quite efficient.

Though it was predictable, he hadn't expected the girl to call him.

"Thank you. I shall not bother you. I'll hang up. Bye."

"Okay."

After the call, the softness between Issac's brows instantly dissipated. Then he put down his phone and said concisely, "Go on."

The booting ceremony of The Arrival of the Empress that Elaine was looking forward to was finally held.

That morning she wore a long dress borrowed from Kelly's studio, put on makeup seriously, and took a taxi to the ceremony.

After arriving at the ceremony, under the guidance of the staff, she stood together with other supporting actors who participated in the TV series.

The news that this TV series was about to start had already triggered a warm response on the Internet. Not only was it invested in a huge amount of money, but also the actors, as well as the producers and the director, were the most popular presently. Hence there would be a lot of entertainment reporters there.

Elaine, who was standing aside, could not hide her excitement. Her envious eyes fell on the male and female leading roles who were smiling gracefully in front of the camera.

“Excuse me, Mr. Waldow, there’s a role named Barbie Saffel in The Arrival of the Empress. Which new actress will play her?”

After interviewing the male and female leading roles, a reporter gossiped about other roles.