Chapter 2711

Three years were more than enough. At the very least, Giselle would not have to participate in any blind dates anymore.

In the meantime, if either of them came across a better partner or if they had fallen in love with someone else, they could just forfeit the agreement.

Long story short, they were just staying together to use each other as a shield.

“Dad, Mom, you’re just overthinking. Even though we can try to date each other, we need some time. What if it doesn’t work out after we get married? Am I going to get a divorce?”

Gordon and Estelle felt that she was right, so they did not force her anymore.

Giselle rose to her feet and said, “Alright, you don’t have to worry about us.”

After that, Giselle walked upstairs.

Estelle and Gordon looked at each other and sighed.

James came to the common room to look for Donny. “Umm, Mr. Winslow...”

Estelle smiled and said, "We're very happy you are here. You don't have to bring us any gifts."

Gordon and Estelle brought him to the living room. It was not easy for James to take a leave from his shooting and come here, so they asked their maids to prepare a scrumptious meal for him.

Estelle asked him all sorts of questions, including what kind of movie he was shooting, and he answered all of them readily. She was happy with his honesty and down-to-earth attitude.

"Being an actor must be very tiring, right?"

James crossed his fingers together and replied with a smile, "Yeah, it is. But there is no such thing as an easy job in this world."

"It's okay. All of us understand how hard and tiring it is to be an actor. But I hope you'll take care of your health no matter how busy you are," Estelle said gently.

James did not know why but felt somewhat guilty when both of them treated him so well. After all, they were not a real couple.

Suddenly, Giselle coiled her arm around his and smiled. "Mom, I'm sure he must be starving since he has just gotten off the plane. Why don't you go check the food in the kitchen?"

“After all, most men think that it’s women’s responsibility to take care of their children and that women should be grateful that they’re willing to help them from time to time. Some of the men don’t even want to take care of their children. Your husband understands that you suffered a lot during the labor process, so I believe he’ll be a good father,” said the nanny.

Daisie was stunned.

Honestly, she felt the nanny was right. She was indeed lucky. After all, most of the time, it was Nollace who took care of their children.

When their kids were crying in the middle of the night, he was the one who went to prepare the milk and comfort them.

She looked at her three babies and grinned widely, “He really is a good father.”

In the evening, Nollace went upstairs to look for Daisie after he came home.

When he could not find Daisie in the bedroom, he headed to the baby room to find that she was sleeping together with their babies.

Nollace placed his jacket on the back of the chair and walked up to the bed.

It was such an eye-catching scene, and he hoped that it would last forever.

Diana put Tic back on the stroller and said, "I'm not good at giving names. You should ask your father. He's better than me at this."

Nollace nodded. "Then, Dad, I need you to help us take care of them for a while."

Rick was stunned. "What? Me?"

"It has been a long time since Daisy and I had the chance to spend time together," Nollace said grumpily.

It had been a long time since they last had any intimate activity, and it was even more impossible for them to do that now with these three kids around them.

Daisy was so embarrassed that she wanted to find a hole and bury herself in it. She did not know how Nollace could bring himself to say something so embarrassing to their parents.

Soon, Rick took up the task of taking care of the three kids. As for Daisy and Nollace, without the kids around them, Nollace stuck with Daisy from morning until night. Both of them enjoyed their days to the fullest, and it seemed like they just couldn't have enough of it.

At midnight, Daisy complained to him breathlessly, "You've eaten all the babies' food rations. What will they eat?"

He grabbed her into his arms and chuckled deeply, "They can drink powdered milk."

Leah was cleaning her clothes, and she was momentarily stunned when she heard what the man said. She raised her head to look at him and smiled. "That's not necessary. Thank you."

After that, she left.

Dennis looked in the direction she had disappeared into as a playful smile appeared on his face.

After Leah came to the restroom, she took off her jacket. She tried to wash the coffee stain off her jacket but to no avail. Therefore, she had no other choice but to wait until she got home before she could wash her jacket.

However, it seemed to her that the man named Dennis was overly enthusiastic.

'Are all men in Stoslo as enthusiastic as him?' she asked inwardly.

In the afternoon, Leah draped her jacket on her arm. A car stopped in front of her when she got out of the building. The driver rolled the window down, and he was none other than Dennis.

"I'm really sorry about getting the coffee stain on your jacket this afternoon. I don't mean anything. I just want to buy a new jacket for you as an apology gift."

Leah did not know why he was so insistent on buying her a new jacket. She had no other choice but to force herself and say, "I accept your apology, Mr. Clarke, but you don't have to buy me anything."

"Alright then. Where are you living? I can drive you back. Just consider this a chance for me to redeem myself."

Leah was stunned.

'Could it be Morrison?'

Leah walked to the door and was about to open it when she suddenly heard Morrison's voice. "Who the hell are you?"

Immediately after that, a series of commotions came from the other side of the door in the corridor.

Leah opened the door instantly and went out, only to see Morrison seemingly trying to grab someone, but the person had fast legs.

"Morrison!" yelled Leah.

He looked back from the end of the corridor and shouted at her angrily, "You didn't check the text that I sent you again, did you!?"

Leah, who got yelled at by him, froze in place and then asked with a somewhat dazed expression, "What text message are you talking about?"

Morrison took a deep breath and scoffed out of pure wrath. "You can throw away your cell phone if you don't plan to use it. I sent you a text message, asking you not to open the door even when you hear a knock on the door. I think death is just not something that bothers you, huh?"

"Did something happen?"

Upon hearing someone else's voice, Leah turned her head and saw Dennis getting out of a car and walking toward the two of them.

The manager nodded slightly. "Mr. Clarke."

Leah narrowed her eyes. "Do you know each other?"

Dennis explained with a smile, "I own this hotel, but I didn't expect you to be here."

Leah was astonished. "Is that so?"

"What happened?" Dennis asked the manager for an explanation, and the manager answered truthfully.

Dennis frowned. "If something like that did happen, that employee is worth firing.

Leah looked back at the woman and could not help but frown.

It was not until Dennis came out of the lounge and ran into her that she returned to her senses.

A trace of panic flashed across his eyes. "Why are you here?"

"I was just walking by. Are you two..."

Dennis laughed out loud all of a sudden. "Oh, she's my girlfriend, and we just had a fight because she cheated on me.

I lost my head just now, so we had a slight dispute. Please, don't misunderstand."

Leah was momentarily stunned and forced a smile.

"This is your business with her, so you don't have to worry about me misunderstanding you.

I have something else to attend to, so see you around."

"Have you found a place to live?" Dennis's voice came from behind.

Leah stopped and looked back at him. "How do you know that I'm searching for a place to live?"

Morrison frowned. "How can you be so carefree with me?"

Leah carried the things into the living room and looked back at him. I'm not your type, am I?"

Morrison was rendered speechless.

Leah picked up the shower gel and was stunned.

"This is actually orchid-scented? Young girls really love this scent, don't they?"

"Why did you buy this scent?"

He walked up to the couch and sat down. "How would I know what scent you're using? I only grabbed whatever they had displayed on the racks"

At this time, Yorrick and Nollace entered the room from the back garden.
