The others agreed.

When the food was served, Daisie looked at the white-colored food that looked like a fan and asked the owner. "What's this?"

The man smiled and explained, "That's Mylotic Cheese. It's made from cow's milk. It's a local delicacy."

Cameron took a bite. "Oh, it tastes great"

Freyja and Colton took bites too, and it did taste nice.

The next dish was served. The man brought it over. "This is chicken. It's made with homemade marinade, spicy oil, pepper, and roasted walnuts. It's our specialty here, and the tourists love it."

Daisie tried it, and Cameron asked, "How is it?"

She nodded and took a bigger bite Everyone tried it too.

Waylon smiled and said, "It does, but it's still early."

Daisie lay on Nollace's legs and looked up at the sky. After a moment, she said, "Do I feel rain?"

Everyone looked at her.

Colton took a deep breath. "Don't jinx it."

Freyja looked at the sky ahead. Even though it was clear where they were, dark clouds were forming around the mountains. "It could just be a cloudy day."

It was almost noon, but the sun wasn't out yet. It might just be a cloudy day with no rain.

Cameron said, "The weather report didn't mention rain today. I don't think it will."

Unless the weather report wasn't accurate!

After a while, Nollace felt something drip on his face. He touched it. "It's really raining."

Cameron sat up. "What?"

The night of the old town was silent. The air was filled with nothing but the humming of insects.

There was a lamp hanging outside of the tent on the grass. The atmosphere was quiet.

Daisie was tossing and turning in the sleeping bag as sleep just wouldn’t come to her. Suddenly, an arm appeared across her waist as she was brought into a chest. “What’s the matter? You can’t sleep?”

“Yeah...” She buried her head in his chest and said, “I want to go to take a leak, but I’m a little bit scared.”

Nollace kissed her forehead and said, “I’ll go with you then.”

Both of them came out of the tent. Nollace took a flashlight and led Daisie to a row of trees in the distance. Daisie turned her head and said, “You wait for me here.”

Nollace nodded. “Just shout my name if you need anything.”

She walked into the forest and stopped in front of a tree not far away from Nollace.

After she had done her business, she hastily got out of the forest and held tightly to Nollace’s arm. “Alright, let’s go back.”

Nollace stretched his arm and wrapped it around her shoulders.

She raised her head and looked into the sky when they were back at the campsite. “Is that the Big Dipper?”

“Yeah, it is,” Nollace replied after lifting his head.

The stall owner said, "$10 for three chances."

"$10 for three chances only? That's expensive," commented Freyja.

The stall owner raised his head and said, "I'm the cheapest around here Other stalls offer $15 for three chances."

Daisie tugged at Freyja and said, "Let's just give him the money It isn't easy for them to set up a stall here anyway, so let's have some fun."

After that, she gave $20 to the stall owner and said, "Please give us six hoops."

The stall owner gave her six hoops. She had her eyes set on a bracelet. Although she knew it was fake, it was rather beautiful. She held a hoop and threw it toward the bracelet.

However, she did not get it.

She threw another two hoops at the bracelet, but her attempts failed, much to her chagrin.

She had only three hoops left.

Seeing that Daisie was prepared to give up, Cameron took over the rest of the hoops in her hand and said, "Leave it to me."

She squinted and aimed at the bracelet. After that, she threw the hoop at it and got it in one shot.

"I've seen them before at your wedding," said Morrison "Your sister is my wife's classmate She has told me before"

"Since when did I become your wife? There's a chance I may not marry you in the future," said Leah.

"We're already engaged If you don't want to marry me, who else are you going to marry?" Morrison frowned, causing the crowd to break out in a burst of laughter, save for Daisie

She looked at Leah in disbelief and asked, "Engaged? When did you get engaged, Leah?"

Soon, it was the end of the month. Their vacation had come to an end, and they returned to Bassburgh

Maisie and Nolan were waiting for them in the courtyard. After getting out of the car, Daisy ran up to them. "Mommy! Daddy!"

She hugged both of them.

Nolan petted her head and smiled helplessly. "You're an adult now You should stop acting like a kid."

She smiled back at them and said, "But I know I'll always be your kid in your eyes."

Maisie chuckled and looked at the other people. "It seems like you guys had a lot of fun. Anyway, come in first. We should eat together tonight."

Freyja and Cameron went to look for their kids after they went into the house. Charm and her two cousins were staying in the same room. All of them were sleeping soundly, and they found the scene eye-appealing.

The rest of the people laughed.

The night came, and the entire city was shrouded in a mist of neon light. Maisie and Nollace returned to Taylorton after having their dinner.

Her hair was wet as she got out of the shower. Nollace took over her towel and helped her to dry her hair.

She sat in front of her dresser and looked at the person behind her through the mirror. There was a smile tugging at the corner of her mouth as she said, "Nolly, I'm really looking forward to our wedding."

"Really?" Nollace gently dried the soft tips of her hair. "I'm looking forward to it too."

"I can say that my life is perfect now, right? Since I can marry and walk down the aisle with the man I love

Daisie grinned from ear to ear. "Then I'll wear this crown on my wedding day, which can be considered an endorsement for my mom's jewelry company and design."

Nollace hugged her from behind. "You can do anything as long as you like it"

The members of the Goldmanns arrived in Yaramoor two days before the wedding and stayed in the hotel arranged by Nollace. The royal family had reserved the entire hotel for receiving distinguished guests from Zlokova who came to attend the wedding.

Members from the Bouchers and the Lucases showed up, and Sunny was also present.

There were also some familiar faces from the Zlokovian entertainment industry. Hannah, Amy, James, and Charlie, who were close friends with Daisie, all came.

Leah and Morrison were also on the invitation list.

When Maisie came to the restaurant, the waiter led her into a private room.

In order to make way for the wedding carriage, other vehicles had been forbidden from accessing the route from the palace to the cathedral.

Daisy looked out of the carriage-the streets were crowded with citizens, and they were all there to witness this grand scene.

Nollace, sitting on the side, was wearing a double-breasted dark blue military jacket. He looked tall and broad, and there were two St. Patrick’s Stars on his epaulets, one on each side, a full set of medals on his chest, and other complicated decorations.

He held the back of Daisy’s hand and smiled suddenly. “You have sweaty palms.”

Daisy looked back at him and responded with a trembling voice, “I’m nervous.”

He lifted her hand and kissed the back of her hand. “I’m here, so don’t be nervous. Just take it easy.”

Daisy’s gaze landed on his wedding jacket. “You look nice in this uniform.”

Nollace chuckled. “And my bride looks stunning too.”

Arriving at the cathedral, Nollace was separated from Daisy. Accompanied by his father, Rick, he walked to the west gate of the cathedral with Yorrick, Brandon, and other royal family members. Thousands of spectators stood in the square in front of the entrance, and the scene looked sensational.
