

A Contract Marriage With My Boss by Anna Shannel Lin Chapter 35

Charles was so happy. He suddenly stood up, hugged her tightly. Then they went into the cabin, happier than they'd ever felt before.

Then, Charles put her down and helped her put the ring on her finger. They both smiled at each other. Sarah's face turned as red as the roses that were scattered around her. Looking at Sarah's red face, Charles was overwhelmed by how charming and cute she was and couldn't help but kiss her.

This time, he wouldn't let her go. He kissed her passionately, expressing his love and relation with every kiss. Both of them became lost in their emotions; they kissed each other and sank into the bed of roses beneath them.

Sarah felt herself losing all self-control when kissing Charles. Charles was clearly feeling the same way and wanted more. Where before, Charles hadn't been sure whether he loved Sarah or just wanted her body; he was now assured that they were in love, which only made him want her more. He just wanted to hug her, kiss her, and make love to her all night long.

Sarah, however, had always kept away from him. He hardly touched her, and she would still be reluctant towards him. It was rare that she was willing to kiss him, but today something was different about her. Charles was beginning to lose control and wanted to have her all to himself. He kissed her, and tore her clothes off, finally kissing her breasts.

Sarah raised her head and groaned, it was unclear whether she was happy or not, but at least she wasn't trying to stop him. Charles, however, stopped in due time. He suddenly picked her up, trying his best to control the urge from his body to kiss her. "We can't do it now. I will respect you, and we'll save ourselves until we get married." Charles said.

Charles kissed her earlobe again. He really struggled to control himself when hugging his beloved girl, but he knew that he had to endure it. "I love you. I will respect you and will not coerce you," he panted.

Sarah felt stunned and a little bittersweet. Unexpectedly, Charles now respected her as he had never done before. Since they had reconciled, she was determined to be with him forever, so she didn't care so much about saving herself now, especially as she would be his wife sooner or later. When Charles kissed her, she no longer resisted him. Sarah had not expected Charles to control himself and was moved by his self-control.

She didn't say anything, just hugged him tightly. After a long time, Charles drove away his lust. They separated and smiled at each other. Charles kissed her again and said, "I won't let you go so easily when we get married. We have a lot to catch up on."

Immediately, Sarah blushed when hearing his words. Charles couldn't help but kiss her again for a moment, then let her go reluctantly and held her by the hand to walk out of the cabin and appreciate the beautiful view outside.

Charles had prepared fireworks that were set off while the vessel continued to sail. It was absolutely splendid! Sarah was so happy and moved by this spectacle and knew that she would look back on it fondly in the future.

They began to plan their wedding almost immediately after the proposal. Mr. Thomas was very happy. When Sarah called her sister up, her sister insisted that she would skip class to see her. Sarah, however, stopped her and assured her that she would choose a holiday so that she can attend the wedding. That way, her sister wouldn't have to miss any school.

Many things needed to be prepared before the wedding, mostly regarding the Thomas family, as Charles's family was so rich, many big names in the business were expected to attend their wedding. Therefore, the work became more complex. Charles only let Sarah pick her favorite sheets and curtains and make decisions about how to decorate their bridal chamber. He insisted on organizing everything else for the wedding in person.

Sarah didn't resist; after all, she was unfamiliar with life in a rich and powerful family. It may not be a bad idea to let Charles do it by himself. Therefore, her work became easier. One day, Sarah got a phone call from Mrs. Thomas when she was picking up bed sheets with her friend. She had hardly seen Mrs. Thomas after Charles left the hospital, and Mrs. Thomas didn't appear, even when Charles proposed to her. Mr. Thomas said she had gone abroad to inspect the foreign trade corporation, so Sarah didn't take notice of it. Now, however, she had unexpectedly decided to call.

"Where are you now?" Mrs. Thomas asked.

