When they got home, Mary looked for the medicine prescribed by the doctor and helped her mother take it. Mindy didn't refuse. She knew that she would otherwise be unable to save her husband and would only trouble her daughter.

After making sure that her mother had fallen asleep, Mary went to her room. She thought of the idea that she had brushed aside before and carefully considered it now. Her family had reached the last moment of life and death; she had to go all out.

After making up her mind, Mary rummaged through the drawers and bags, searching for Mr. Leng's business card. She had taken it with her, but she didn't know where she put it. She looked for a long time, but didn't find it.

Sweat was trickling down her forehead. This could very well be the last option to save her father. Without that business card, she had no way to find and contact that cold and powerful man.

After a long time of search, she finally found the precious card in a small storage box. She cried with joy.

When she managed to calm down, she briefly glanced around the messy room. She didn't have time to clean up now. She diverted her attention to the business card. 'Franklin Leng, CEO, Leng Group. Contact number 1823403...' When it dawned on Mary that he was the CEO of the Leng Group, her eyes lit up.

In J City, even children knew of Leng Group. When she had heard others call him Mr. Leng before, she did suspect that he might have a special identity. But she didn't expect him to actually be the CEO himself, who had brought their family business to the international stage at such a young age.

Theirs was one of the most powerful families in the country. Their children and grandchildren all had a brilliant future in the military, political and business circles. Most distinguished among them was Franklin, who had extraordinary ab ilities despite his young age.

He became Leng Group's CEO at the age of twenty-five, and managed to put the conglomerate among the top fifty business entities in the world. The Leng Group engaged in a variety of industries. As long as they held promise and were profitable ventures, the Leng Group invested in them, creating business legends one after another.

If she somehow convinced this man to help her, Mary had no doubt that her father would be saved. Not only would he be released from jail, but there was also the very real possibility of York regaining the glory of the Liu Group. Of course, the chances were extremely low, so she quickly dismissed any hopes that Liu Group might return to her family. Nevertheless, anyone else could have it except for the person who had done this to her father.

The crux of the matter now was how to persuade Franklin, the arrogant and noble member of the Leng family, to help her. He had only the best of everything, what could she possibly offer him? It truly was a feat to even be able to reach him.

But Mary wasn't willing to give up. She had to give it a try, one way or another. It was the last life line in her sight.

Despite having his contact number, she still decided to personally call on him at his company. Her situation was too complicated for her to be able to explain it properly over the phone. Besides, she was rather afraid to dial his number. If he refused her right away, there wouldn't be any other hope for her family.

She could also express her sincerity if they talked face to face. If he shut her down at the first try, it was easier for her to try again. She could just keep trying again and again.

And so, the next day, Mary got up early. She made breakfast and took care of her mother, making sure she was fine. Then, she took the bus to the Leng Group.
