Sona

She was standing on the side of the bed in her red lehenga .
Tears dripping from her eyes thinking that just in a month how her life has changed totally, all her dreams shattered.
This burden of marriage like other Indian girls was now also in her fate but she never imagined it to be so soon at this tender age.

She was a simple middle class girl who wanted to achieve something in her life wanted to give her life a meaningful cause. She had dreams in her eyes and ambitions to achieve.

Her height was 5.5 and has long chocolate brown curls.

She had no choice but to marry a person whom she barely knows.
She was happy with her life going to college spending time with her parents. She wanted to achieve something, some capabilities that she can own, something due to which she will be known. She wanted to be independent.
Not just her husband's wife.

And one thing she was really bad at was expressing things. She never used to communicate what she feels how she is hurt by others. She keeps it with her own self.

And right now She was trauma of mixed emotions fear and nervousness was clear on her face. She was feeling pity on her ownself but there was no escape she felt a lots of responsibilities in her shoulders and she was just a baby to handel all those which a new family would be expecting from her.

But when all her emotions will erupt like a volcano then what will happen.

Anirudh

He was a hard shell to crack. But loved his family that was his mom and dad.

To get married was the last thing he wanted in his life. He had achieved everything at such young age without any business background or hand that would support him.

His situation was same like that of a new face entering into the career of acting without having any pillar of support.

But he made his own pillars and rose to power.

Soon he was the youngest billionaire and he started extending his business.

Everything was going on smoothly until his mother had made up her mind to get her son married.

Circumstances are such and destiny played its part and they had to tie a knot together.

Now let's see how they will handle the rollercoaster ride of their marriage life.
