

Ex-husband Goes Money Comes Chapter 396

“Someone else?”

Hearing her words, Ormand sneered and looked at her sharply and sarcastically. “Are you recommending yourself? Who are you again?”

Todd echoed, “One should know their limits.”

Max’s expression turned completely cold.

“Mr. Hobson, I hope you will still stick to your choice when everyone knows that Viola is an illegitimate daughter, and you are facing the crisis of the Hobson Group’s plummeting stock prices.”

With a smile in her beautiful eyes, Max sneered arrogantly and turned to leave.

Looking at her back as she got into the car, Todd spat and gnashed his teeth. "If I didn't know better, I would have thought that she wasn't an illegitimate daughter!

"She got into me! What's she got to be proud of? Who gave her the nerve?

"Leia is only nineteen years old, but those tricks Leia has got only make her adorable.

On the contrary, Max makes me sick!"

Todd was indignant and cursed for a long time, yet he could not calm down.

Ormand didn't stop Todd. Ormand said,

"Take care of Viola and Layne's paternity test. Make sure it's done properly."

“Sure thing. Mr. Hobson, I got it!”

Todd nodded and immediately entered the visiting room.

After giving the order, Ormand carefully carried Viola to the back seat of the car.

Todd had gone to handle the matter, and to pick up Viola this time, Ormand had specially brought the driver together with him, so that he didn't need to drive now.

On the way, Ormand held Viola in his arms while using his laptop. It looked like he was dealing with the company's affairs.

The moment Viola got in the car, she opened her eyes.

She leaned quietly in Ormand's arms and looked out of the window with cold eyes. She was lost in her thoughts.

At such a critical juncture, she couldn't fall asleep at all, but she didn't bother to confront Max and listen to Max's sarcasm.

Viola simply let Ormand handle it.

When they arrived at the garage of the Hobson's place, Ormand was about to carry

Viola out of the car. Only then did he realize that she was awake the whole time.

"How long have you been awake? Was it uncomfortable for you to sleep, because I was handling business?" he asked, gently stroking her nose with his finger.

"It was alright. I just woke up," Viola smiled.

Ormand did not say anything. He carried her out of the car steadily and held her tightly in his arms. Then they went back to Viorin.

As they were passing through the winding alleys of the Hobson's place, Viola stared at his face.

She hesitated for a long time before asking, "Orin, if ... if I am not the daughter of the McGraw family, our engagement is for naught. Once it becomes known to the entire country, and everyone knows that you, the head of the Hobson Group, married the daughter of a prisoner, an illegitimate daughter who is just a nobody, the Hobson Group will suffer great losses, and you may lose billions of dollars overnight. Even so, you are still willing to marry me?"

Ormand listened quietly. He looked ahead and walked with full concentration. He did not lower his head to look at her, nor did he immediately answer her question.

"Viola, let's go back. I have a gift for you."

He didn't answer her. Viola's heart sank.

She thought, instead of the daughter of the McGraw family, I will be an illegitimate kid whose father is a prisoner.

The difference is unbelievably huge. Even

Ormand would hesitate...

I should be able to get it.

But I still feel so disappointed and sad.

It has only been a day. Yet within a day,

everyone turns their backs on me, and I'm all alone.

Even Ormand fails to be the man I can rely on when it comes to things this big. I have no one to trust but myself. I am all I have to win everything back.

Thinking of this, she lowered her eyes sadly.

She retracted her hands that had been around Ormand's neck tightly.

Ormand keenly sensed the change in her emotions.

The doctor said that pregnant women tended to be a little more skeptical than ordinary people because of their excessive hormones. They couldn't help it, and they needed to be appeased.

Ormand immediately realized the words he said might have come out wrong.

He quickly added, "Viola, I wasn't trying to dodge your question. Before I went to the visiting room to pick you up, I was preparing a gift for you. It took me the whole day. I was planning on answering you while showing

you the surprise."

It was dawn. He stood at the door of Viorin and put her down.

He took out a black ribbon, wanting to put it on her.

“What are you up to?” Viola stopped him.

“Be good. Just wear it for a few minutes.

You’ll know soon enough. Trust me,”

Ormand said in a low and hoarse voice. He hooked his thin lips mysteriously.

When their eyes met, Viola was tempted by the burning excitement in his eyes and agreed.

He immediately helped her put it on gently

and covered her beautiful eyes.

Then he clasped her fingers and led her into the garden carefully.

It was only when they reached the tree in the garden that Ormand removed the ribbon

from her eyes.

“Viola, you can open your eyes now.”

Viola slowly opened her eyes and was instantly attracted by the scene in front of her.

The tree in the garden was covered with small white lights. They were blinking like stars in the sky. Behind them was the setting sun that glowed red in the sky. It was unexpectedly harmonious with the tree and was very beautiful.

Under the tree, there were 9,999 green roses.

The heart of each rose was filled with a pearl.

The roses were beautiful, dazzling, and eye-catching. Also, it went without saying that they were very expensive.

It was the first time Viola had seen so many light-green roses, and she smiled with amazement.

Ormand walked in front of her, knelt on one knee, and held her hand devoutly.

His pair of shimmering eyes were filled with love and gentleness, and she was all he could see.

“Viola, our relationship began with an agreement, and we are about to get married because of the babies. But this is a must for other girls, and my Viola is no exception.”

He lifted his face and spoke earnestly and calmly, “Viola, if you are not the daughter of the McGraw family, if our engagement has to be canceled, then I will propose to you again.”

Viola trumped everything, including any position and money.

He took out the diamond ring box that he had already prepared and opened it in front of her.

Inside was an 18-carat ruby diamond ring, which was unique in the world.

He specifically sent Todd overseas a while back to buy it for 1.55 billion dollars at a charity auction. Then he had someone carve the abbreviation of Viola's name.

"Viola, will you marry me?"

Viola was slightly stunned. She looked at the ruby diamond ring in his hands and then looked at Ormand's extremely handsome face. Her eyes gradually turned red.

All of the loneliness, unwillingness, and disappointment in her heart were gone. She was moved beyond words.

She was suspecting that Ormand might give her up or love her less because of her identity, while Ormand went out of his way to surprise her, to fill her heart.

He was the man she loved deeply.

He was also the man who loved her the most in the world.

“Viola, my knees hurt. Just say yes.” Ormand

hadn’t gotten her answer, so he said softly

and gently like he was a spoiled child.