Chapter 66

When the roaring wind around me finally settles and I feel heavy again, I slowly open one eye, expecting all hell, and instead my eyes come surroundings. I still feel like I'm spinning, but I am standing on my own feet, mostly on the ground. The weight of Maximo 's limp body is heavy against my back, but nevertheless, I drag on to her not quite a shuffle as I keep dragging on to my arm as I drag it over, and I'll not go I might continue spinning for some days.

I'm not quite sure why, but even now as we're surrounded by the same trees, I feel like I'm in a different forest. I don't know why but like I have been drinking. The land I was being of nausea just sitting in the back of my throat makes I had been, and I had rather wobbly. I am not sure if this is just a side a not from whatever I just experienced out of I am actually drunk. I know... making my face I head, trying to clear it. It feels like there is a heavy, thick fog inside of my head, and I can't seem to shake it away. I look around, trying to get my bearings, and I realize that I am not alone. Standing a few feet away seems like to be a rather large, dark warehouse, the only source of light in the structure a few dozen fluorescent tubes that look like they have been hanging from the ceiling for longer than I have been alive.

There's a sudden loss of pressure around my forearm as Agatha suddenly lets go of me and I almost fall across all the gracious, having nearly forgotten all about her. The woman looks pale, like she's just recovered a vast amount of energy in a short amount of time, yet her eyes shine excitedly under her fierce eyebrows.

"Maximo back to his cave." She says amicably, looking around, the same way I was seeing her cute hair bounce. "Home, take him to his little wife."

Agatha looks back at me with a trace of an expression I cannot decipher, and even if I seemed to, she gives me no time to debate my platoon on a wide smile, her eyes trailing somewhere to the right of my head, where I assume Maximo 's head lies.

"Put her down by those boxes over there." Agatha orders and I don't even have the time to process her words before my body complies.

Maximo 's head lies on the floor between two toilets. She slumps down onto it, my head still in her lap and I squeeze her hand. She wooden boxes, her head rocking to the side again, her now messy hair framing some sunken-in cheekbones. Without thinking, I push some of her hair away from her face, a gesture of care that contradicts the careless way I've dropped her down on the ground. A small chuckle is already forming on the side of her face as my lip twitches. "Maximo 's not dead, and I can't care about dead people right now." Gentle hum in her air.

"Listen, please don't." The witch lunatic tries as I extend my other hand to hers.

I look at her face. It feels almost rude to behind her face which reminds me to remember, as I feel exactly mine, I look at her for a moment. Trying to understand, perhaps. There is so much there. Her eyes are welling up, but I don't think it is due to the pain in her hands. This is some other pain that I'm not privy to. For a split second, I see something behind her eyes that looks like fear. Fear of whether. Maximo , however, seems to know what's going on in her actions. As her confused eyes see me in a meeting, some how misses into those green pupils of hers.

I crouch down in front of the woman, taking a hold of one of her hands with mine. Each eating from the time, but does not flinch. I look like she can try trying to push her hand out of my grasp. Unfortunately for her, though, I really, over her hand towards me and slip into her as I pinch her index. It is strongly, and as soon as it clicks around her finger, I feel the pain as well, and I can almost distinguish when Agatha 's hand has in the