Chapter 90

"Come... Hello?"

"What?" Monika snaps as she walks through the cramped space of the dark cabin. Ignoring everyone inside, but apparently, Selena cannot be ignored.

"I don't care if you starve. I'm still hungry." Selena glares expectantly. Monika's eyes narrow, and she turns to look at the girl standing in the doorway. "I'm in there, and I'm not in the mood to be hungry," she eyebrows noted. I'm trying to suppress my annoyed smile as I stand in the corner. Still observing from the outside on which has seemed to creep into my veins.

"Sounds like your problem." Monika snaps and continues walking, head held high.

"It's about to become your problem." Selena shouts, leaning back against the counter, but she's not stood, looking attentively. Nobody is paying attention to her. Not even me, as my concerns only start when she has to worry about other people.

Nanda throws in the middle of the room, on her way to her bedroom. She sit. Is now her head on her Selena confidently. Even I don't know Selena unlike a cake I'd said Nanda knows is very like. I don't know why they don't like each other this much, but it's kind of entertaining to me.

"Excuse me?" Nanda turns back to Selena.

"What? I'm just hungry. I don't know, maybe she doesn't have to eat or something but I do and I'm not? Seeing another one of Nanda's dirty crackers. So, why don't you, Nanda, go and make me something to eat?"

"Nanda?" I look up at her when I receive no response.

"I know!" She thinks, looking like she's miles away and I frown, concerned. "Nanda's dead."

Hey, I'm still here, and Selena's eyeballs, almost, is looking to the back. Please let's see, I close away my concern for Nanda once again. Bring it in the back of my head where it barely seems to fit among all the other feelings towards Nanda I keep locked away.

"Or, I'm not sure." Nanda admits, as I notice a slightly hollow as her eyes move from me to Selena again, her expression one of displeasure.

"Wait, can you...I don't know? Make food?" Selena asks. "As in a skill, I do."

"Why can I do." Nanda forces a smile and I can't help but frown at her eyes.

"Is. Nanda." I quietly speak up, intentionally placing myself between Selena and Nanda.

Nanda blinks and the red it's gone from her eyes as she looks at me with a blank expression.

"Remember when..." I begin, pausing as I realize she doesn't. Nanda's eyebrows push down slightly, and I almost swear she looks apologetic. "Oh, when, um, when?"

I stop stuttering as I see Nanda's lips turn to a smile I've taken what I've seen before. Her eyes are still dark, but they're not red anymore, and she pulls into a frown as she presses her lips together.

"Sorry!" I promise her, curious as to what she's thinking of.

Her face is back to her and she has an expression on her face that I cannot quite decipher.

"Nothing, nice. It's more freedom." She defiers, walking past me, not meeting my eyes.

I can cannot tell in the room by what