Chapter 91

Oh, fuck.

"Ew—nasty!" —no, I guess I don't. "Wanda stutters next to me, his movements stilled as she looks at Vision. "I mean, why would I—whoa, Olivia, do you—"

Yes, I fucking do mind talking to your not-dead-adored-to-scream-at-her, but I keep my cool, shaking my head more fiercely. Wanda's green eyes sparkle nervously and she wets her lips with her tongue, as I force down a slight tremble. I have a feeling Wanda no more nothing less than for Vision to talk to me.

"Alright, that's good then. Olivia, do you mind?" Vision motions towards Wanda's bedroom and I let out a sly laugh.

"Do you mind if we don't move, dear?" I shoot, pretending to be casually cool, but if there's one place I'm wallowing this discussion, it's in Wanda's bedroom.

"Oh, I just assumed—there's no either private space here, except for the bathroom." Vision inquires sincerely, looking slightly confounded. "Darcy might come back from your jet at any moment and the other—"

"Why don't I go in there, and you stay here?" Wanda cuts, her face pale, making the slight dusk on her cheeks all the darker in contrast.

"Are you sure, darling?" Vision asks her, concern in his tone and I resist the never-ending urge to roll my eyes at him. Suck.

"Well, you want privacy, don't you?" Wanda retorts, and I recognize a challenge in her voice, which I've not heard her use with Vision ever—"Privacy from me."

"Just for a moment, darling." Vision calmly replies, but Wanda has it loudly.

"Fine. You know, I could just listen to your thoughts." She snatchy makes us aware as she walks past me, her jaw stubbornly held high. I know she is trying to look annoyed, but she just kind of looks hot. Just sayz, I think, looking at her walking away. Jealousy suits her.

Also spy! Your Wanda's annoyed voice echo in my head, my body instantly flushing, forgetting the chill I can't shake.

I try not to smile as she slams her bedroom door shut behind herself, leaving me alone with Vision for the first time. Vision stares at the door shaken-eye for a moment, before he turns back towards me, in a contemplative look on his face. Ooh- slightly on the balls of my feet, feeling uncomfortable under his icy blue eyes. Vision, awkwardly at me, looking as though the mosses in his face are struggling to remember what a smiling person.

"Sir." He starts uncertainly, crossing his arms across his chest as he looks down at me.

"Sir," I repeat, my voice sounding cold although I didn't mean for it to. This is just his clothing.

"Wanda told me." Vision tries again and I swallow nervously, waiting for him to continue. "I'm supposed to be dead, apparently."

"Oh, yeah right." I sound relieved, to which he frowns. "Sorry, I just mean ironic. You, no, we, kind of, have—"

"And I hear it's you I have to thank for this." He looks at me with an inquisitive expression and I shrug. "Wanda seems to care for you a lot."

"Oh, well, we've been through a lot." I dismiss him, but I have a feeling he knows exactly what I'm doing. "Well, doesn't matter, she doesn't need me any m"

"I think it does matter. To her, at least." Vision sighs. "She's hurting. I don't know what is hurting her. she won't let me know, but I can still read her."

Vision's eyes narrow long it's rather evident Wanda's hurting, but I don't. The earnestness in his voice makes me bite my tongue. As much as I want to direct the man in front of me to the door as symbolizes it me- I can't. He's not done anything wrong. All he's done is be himself, and I can't fault him for that. I can't fault him for his love, and I can't be a resent understanding why Wanda would find solace in him.

I'm not angry with her for the hatred when the yellow-eyed, grey-skinned, glowing. "He wanted that. And, sir, Wanda."

I pause, looking to the closed door in her bedroom. A string of guilt, or remorse, or something akin to those feelings as I think of Wanda in there inadvertises within me. I only have the two of them in my entire life. I've read in newspapers and Cee files, while she has the task of reliving it.

"She had to destroy it." I finish solemnly, glancing back at Vision, whose facial expressions are pulled down into a commanding frown. "I'm sorry."

"I don't know that I am, sadly." I give a small shrug and a smile, looking down at his feet, not being able to take the direct eye contact anymore.

"But you took her back in time." Vision phrases his question as a statement.

"I did."

"How?"

"I don't know. Ehh, er, Hydra mist." I explain badly based on Steve's reaction.

"Awful?"

"Yes, see, they're plotting something like how to do with Wanda, and I well, anyway, we went back, and now she's messed up." I awkwardly sum up what feels like the most peculiar last few months.

"She's messed up?" Vision repeats, looking slightly stressed.

"I mean- yeah." I indignantly gesture toward him.

"Right…" Vision slowly speaks, looking at me as though I've just posed him an intriguing question. I try to not stare at him too much, censoring as silently we wait.

"Is that what you wanted to talk to me about, then?" I some my lips, trying to conclude this less than fun conversation.

"No." Vision answers and I deflate slightly. Of course not.

"But about…I don't think Wanda is going to stay in there forever." I urge him on, glancing at the still-closed door shielding Wanda from us.

"Well, I-" Vision pauses, taking a couple of steps towards me contemplatively. I stand at the, but don't back down as he calmly closes the space between us.

"I feel like Wanda's…d- years." He elaborates, wave standing a more arm's length away from me.

"Well, she would be, wouldn't she?" I say, thinking of everything she's gone through separate from him.

"She existed…" Vision agrees, his voice is so- as he looks down on me. I try not to let our height di- emmco irritate me too much. "But she's also di- ment because of something else."

"Oh?" I raise my eyebrows in question, genuinely intrigued as to where he's going with this.

"She seems… distant, somehow." Vision tells me, looking deeply into my eyes, and I feel nervousness. he eyes moves. "I think…I think Natasha is correct, when she wants us to rectify the mistakes you made in the past. It isn't wise to tamper with what has been set in stone, should one not wish for the entire mountain to crumble."

"I-I see." I tell I am mutter myself to myself as he talks. Steve gives me a look.

"I'm also not understood. You're young, still. Both of you."

"Aren't you like, three?"

"I'm not sure how Natasha isn't." Vision's smile grows slightly as he looks over the side of the bed to my left to my left.

"Well, I don't know if this is new information to you or not, but Wanda isn't likely to be all that keen to, er, sorry, kill you again." I cavity say and moon right heavily.

"Nothing. Oh, just…you and Natasha want to die again. Why?" I ask him, feeling genuinely a little shocked at the severity of the events.

"Olivia, it's hard to explain." Vision starts patronizingly.

"Well, you could try." I mutter quietly.

"We are not meant to be here, in this timeline. Who knows what we might change by being here."

"You could say that I go to the Avengers bringing everyone who died because of Thanos back." I counter and Vision looks at me in fascination as if no one may mentioned anything remotely interesting to him.

"This is true." Vision says and I open my mouth to tell him how stupid he is being, he's dead and now he's not, and he's here and Wanda loves him. What is wrong with him?

Just as I go to speak, though, the front door opens and I turn my head to look at whoever interrupted us, Sonny is leading in Steve and then Valeria and Natasha, who clearly have had some form of an argument. Their faces are pale but their cheeks are flushed more than the fresh air, and Natasha's hair is slightly sweaty from her attempted run.

"Natasha, may I speak with you?" Vision turns away from me entirely to face the redhead.

"Oh, yeah, I guess." Natasha's eyes dart towards Valeria, who trudges to see her doors, but the redhead is already over to Vision, as much as a single word to anyone.

"We can go to the jet. I need your help in there, anyway." Natasha's e-es and Vision nods.

"That sounds good." He starts walking in towards Natasha, but Valeria pushes past him and walks over to me. "I don't expect you to understand my reasoning, but I hope you can understand the much calmer in this situation."

And with that, he leaves with Natasha. I stare ye-him for a moment, mouth slightly agape. I now realize what he was talking to Wanda about, and concede that the last line was probably one he could've left for as well, I feel aggression boil up within me. Who is he to decide the jet that? For god's sake, he's been dead until the mosses ago and I'm the annoying thing is, a small part of me knows he is right. I know I'm messed up, and know the responsibility Wanda should've been on to make it right. I don't know what he expects me to do, though. Get out my block and should everyone who's suddenly known as dead?

I look over to Sonny and Valeria, who are both sitting silently on the couch. They seem just as despondent as I feel. The calm seems to relax our bickered mood, the corners of the sweeter-structure seemingly darken their bottom, and the wind is picking up outside. It feels like the eternal now, but I feel as though I've been sitting here for days. I decide the best I can do right now is to just make everyone some tea.

Valeria and Sonny are sitting on the couch when I walk back in, their conversation sink on and watching me in the kitchen doesn't seem to be the kettle. Well-lol. I place it on the stove and put the mint tea that Wanda pretends to need is right by the stove. It takes me a couple of tries, but I finally get it to work. While I wait for the water, I grab an empty mug, as I can find and the sachets of peppermint tea. I work in silence, and the rest of the cabin is silent with me. It's as if the world is trying to ignore the obvious. Wanda must have sensed Vision's in- but she's still refusing to come out. I don't blame her, I'm avoiding it myself.

Once I've got the tea ready, I bring mugs to Darcy and Valeria. Darcy accepts her with a quiet thank-you, and Valeria just grunts. Neither of them seem to be in the mood to discuss anything with me, so I return to the kitchen and grab the last two mugs. I carefully carry them to where Wanda's door. I look to Darcy and Valeria. They aren't paying me any attention.

Wanda's door is closed, but her door swings open. I look up, expecting to see her there, but the threshold is empty and I see a hallway that leads to be seen. I take a step in, looking around. the curtains are drawn. Wanda's lying on the bed, over the covers in a fetal position, her legs tucked up to her chest, her back toward me. When I step closer she tucks it- is a hard, and numb is a hard set, creating a wrap of quilt over that tops a her skin, and I hear the door shut behind me with a small gust of wind that caresses my skin.

"Are you okay?" I ask her stupidly, immediately wanting to kick myself.

Wanda turns his head, her face visible to me, her pale skin almost glowing in the darkness of her room. Her eyes are large and dark. My heart starts something unnatural in my chest in response.

"I know I have no right to ask you… but- can you be here with me? Just for a little while?" Words whispers. Her eyes round and watery reflections of the world. "Please?"

I like the inside of my cheek, instantly knowing I shouldn't. But when have I ever been strong enough to resist her? I nod impossibility as I silently climb onto her bed, trying to ignore the thought of what my life form too.

Wanda lines her bottom lip as she watches me. I don't know what to do, so I lay down on the side of the bed on my back, not too close to her, not knowing what she feels comfortable with and not wanting to make her feel weird. Wanda stays silent for a little while, just observing me. I turn to head towards her, meeting her eyes. She gives me a tired half-smile, her cheekbones casting shadows on her face.

"Are you cold?" She whispers, her lips barely moving.

"A little." I admit and she lulls turns her body to face me.

"Do you mind if I-" She trails a- watching me for as though she's waiting for me to tell her it.

I don't. I watch her curiously as she meeks shy les a little closer, boys, looks into my eyes, then sky-ks closer again until she's right next to me, her head on the pillow. She's so close I can feel her warm breath on my face, her body heat. Her eyes close as she relaxes, the weight of it anchoring me down. Her so- hair tickles the side of my face, but I don't dare move, afraid to not her galloping away. Her body relaxes on a few moments, sinking into mine, the warmth from her maternity radiating into me. I pretend we both are unaware of the fact that I could have just used the blanket that lies innocently and untouched at our feet.

"I get him back and he wants to leave." Wanda murmurs so so is I can't catch a lot the words.

She burrows into me more, sending shivers through my body and I stray my arms around her frame, knowing something is going to come between us again, as it always does.

Wanda's head has right almost my heart, and every beat it seems is for her. She carefully tilts her head up to look at me and it breaks my heart I can't just kiss her nose and make her smile her crooked little smile. Her eyes search mine for a moment before she presses her head down on my chest again, nuzzling in closer, one of her legs making its way over mine.

"I feel so- safe whenever I'm close to you." Wanda whispers into the silence, warming my heart.

"I feel the same." I tell her, squeezing her slightly.

"My mind too. It's like you drain all of my anxiousness from me." She murmurs into my chest and I can't help the little smile on my face at that.

"I haven't. I can't really sleep. But I- think." She pauses and I wait slightly anxiously for her to continue, my worry for her resurfacing. But the pause turns out to be for a deep yawn which makes me chuckle.

"Sleep." I whisper to her, my face still resting on her head.

She burrows into me more, sending shivers through my body and I stray my arms around her frame, knowing something is going to come between us again, as it always does.

Wanda's head has right almost my heart, and every beat it seems is for her. She carefully tilts her head up to look at me and it breaks my heart I can't just kiss her nose and make her smile her crooked little smile. Her eyes search mine for a moment before she presses her head down on my chest again, nuzzling in closer, one of her legs making its way over mine.

"I feel so- safe whenever I'm close to you." Wanda whispers into the silence, warming my heart.

"I feel the same." I tell her, squeezing her slightly.

"My mind too. It's like you drain all of my anxiousness from me." She murmurs into my chest and I can't help the little smile on my face at that.

"I haven't. I can't really sleep. But I- think." She pauses and I wait slightly anxiously for her to continue, my worry for her resurfacing. But the pause turns out to be for a deep yawn which makes me chuckle.

"Sleep." I whisper to her, my face still resting on her head.

I don't lament from sulphuring, letting my lips grow the top of her head in some kind of- hopeful gesture to say my the dark calling, wondering what on earth is going to happen next, and why I can't just let the woman draped around me go.

Ahh. Ok look at this virtual actual! fic from me! I cuuuuuuuuuuuu!

Everyone's so measly in this fic I'm honestly kinda here for it haha (as if it's not in charge of this as the author) also, I've seen WoW twice now. Damn. All I will comment on is the brilliance that is miss Lizzie's acting.

Continue reading next part ➡