The First Heir – Chapter 1596

Philip gave them a cold look, took a list from Theo's hand, and looked at it. Then, he slammed it on the conference table heavily and shouted, "Here's a list of all those who reached an agreement with Martin Johnston last night."

Clatter!

All of a sudden, the crowd panicked. He was about to settle the score with them right now.

Immediately, many people stood forward and knelt in front of Philip to beg him, "Mr. Clarke, we were wrong. We were really wrong. We were blinded by Martin Johnston. We're really loyal to Beacon. Please forgive us."

However, Philip looked at them coolly and asked those who were still standing, "Does anyone else want to come forward?"

One after another, several people stood up and knelt on the floor, admitting their mistakes.

Philip sighed, looked at the dozen people kneeling in front of him, and said, "From today, you've been dismissed. You may leave now."

At his words, those people panicked. They glanced at each other before saying to Philip, "Mr. Clarke, that's not what you said just now. You said that no matter how much Martin offered us, you'd triple the price."

Boom!

Philip went over and kicked the man away, roaring, "People like you who repeatedly turn your backs on others for profits will bring disasters upon Beacon if you remain here! I'm already going easy on you by not coming after you, yet you still want to stay and enjoy the dividends from Beacon? Get lost!"

With that roar, those people got up and fled in fright.

Philip looked at the remaining people and said, "As for you..."

Swish!

The remaining people bowed their heads respectfully as if waiting for a royal decree.

Philip chuckled and said, "Very good. I won't treat you badly."

After that, Philip left Beacon Group.

After Martin and Bernard left Beacon, they returned to the hotel where they were staying.

Biff, bang!

In the suite, Martin smashed a lot of things before saying to Bernard sullenly, "Spread that secret!"

"Second Brother, do you really want to do that?"

Bernard was still a bit worried.

Martin said angrily, "Philip is bullying me like this. Why should I show mercy? Notify all the media in the city and tell them there's an explosive secret about Wynn Johnston!"
