

The First Heir – Chapter 1784

The branch Dunley family only moved here later, and to a large extent, they had not gained respect from the locals in Flower City. Later, due to the high status of the main Dunley family in Charbury, other regions were in awe of the talents in the Dunley family. If ranked by seniority and origin, it was still far from enough for the branch Dunley family to dominate Flower City.

This formed a situation where all the forces held each other in check. In fact, the six underground lords of Flower City did not accept the Dunley family at all. However, they were so apprehensive of the prestige and strength of the main Dunley family in Charbury that they were still respectful of Milo.

At this moment, Jowin entered the private room. A bunch of his underlings followed closely. They each had a crew cut and tattoos, which made them look extraordinarily domineering.

Their appearance made Milo sullen.

“Master Jowin, what brings you here?”

Although Milo inwardly refused to yield to Jowin, he still smiled and asked when he saw him. His attitude was neither respectful nor fearful.

Jowin Benson was ranked second among the six lords in Flower City. Known as Master Jowin, he was very influential in Flower City. It was rumored that no one would dare disrespect Master Jowin in Flower City.

That was because any dispute that occurred in Flower City would end up with Jowin stepping in and solving it. His status in Flower City was very high!

Jowin looked at Milo indifferently and passed by him. Then, in the crowd’s astonished gaze, he walked up to Philip, bowed respectfully, and said, “Young Master Clarke, sorry I’m late. I just received a call from Mr. Thomas. Leave the rest to me.”

Philip glanced at Jowin, nodded, and stood aside calmly. This scene naturally caused Milo, Homer, and others to be shocked and overwhelmed.

This was Master Jowin Benson of the six lords in Flower City!

He was a renowned figure in Flower City!

However, at this moment, he was so respectful to the young man in front of them.

Milo's face turned dark in a flash. He did not expect Philip to know Jowin, and it seemed that Jowin respected Philip a lot!

Things were getting a little tricky.

Homer's face looked worse now and he was in a very bad mood. After looking at his seventh brother who was not speaking, he stepped forward and said to Jowin coldly, "Master Jowin, are you going to intervene in this matter? This is a private matter of our Dunley family. Although you have some status in Flower City, you should carefully consider whether to interfere with this."

Hearing this, Jowin turned around. He stared at Homer coldly and said solemnly, "Homer Dunley, you're not yet qualified to question my actions, right?"

"You!"

Homer gritted his teeth in anger at this. He was about to say something when Milo stopped him.

Milo looked at Jowin and asked, "Master Jowin, are you sure you want to interfere in this matter?"

Jowin smiled and said, “Milo, isn’t it obvious? As I said when I entered the room just now, no one can do anything to Young Master Clarke in Flower City! Even if you’re a member of the Dunley family, you can’t either.”

“Really?” Milo’s face was full of chills, and the corners of his eyes twitched. His brows were wrinkled in a deep frown
