

Forgive My Ex-husband Chapter 92

Then Nelson didn't make any specific arrangements for the couple and kicked them out of the study.

It wasn't a desperate issue that needed any fixation. So, Melinda left with Jonas. She was silent on her way back to their villa. Leonard had sent a cat from the countryside as a gift for Melinda. It was a fluffy, happy kitten that made Melinda happy.

"Momo, be quiet," she said.

The cat lifted its head lazily and looked at Melinda with its big watery eyes. It purred softly, licked its paw, and curled itself as it lay under the warm sun.

Jonas was seeing the cat for the first time. He stepped closer and extended his arm to touch it but the cat flew into a rage and jumped away.

Melinda was seeing the cat only now after she had met him first. The cat had returned after being vaccinated and having a haircut.

"You frightened the cat."

Melinda scowled at Jonas. She stepped closer to Momo, squatted, and ruffled its fluffy hair. She smiled at how cute it looked.

Momo stared at Melinda with its big eyes and walked slowly towards her. Its haughty look amused Jonas and he couldn't help laughing. His laughter scared Momo as it took a step back and stared at the two of them with frightened eyes.

"Jonas!"

Every time Melinda tried getting closer to the cat, Jonas did something or other, driving it away. She glared at Jonas with frustration. Jonas realized the similarity between the cat and Melinda was uncanny. She was looking like a wild cat, waiting to pounce on him.

After a lot of time and effort, Melinda found the cat with the help of the servants. She picked up the cat and rubbed her cheek against its fluffy cheeks as Momo's whiskers tickled her.

"Momo is a lovely cat."

Melinda couldn't stop smiling when she was with the cat. She pulled the phone from her pocket and asked the servant to take pictures of her with the cat. Momo snuggled comfortably against Melinda's chest and closed its eyes.

Jonas watched everything from a distance. Melinda sat on the stone bench, under the tree, with the cat in her arms. She was happily cuddling and playing with the cat. The warm sunlight cast a soft shadow on her face.

Melinda had a strange feeling that someone was looking at her. She lifted her head and saw a lonely figure, leaning against the wall. It was Jonas. He was wearing a casual gray T-shirt and track pants, smiling at her.

Melinda spent the entire afternoon playing with the cat and fell asleep on the stone table. Momo curled up on her lap and slept peacefully.

Jonas walked closer to Melinda. Momo snapped its eyes open and snarled at him. It began to purr incessantly, alerting Melinda.

"Momo doesn't like you. Better stay away from me," Melinda mumbled in her sleep.

She slowly opened her eyes and saw Jonas. She picked Momo and went back to her study. Jonas quietly followed her like a protective guardian. Melinda couldn't help but smile.

All the taunts and hate comments gradually disappeared after Emily made the clarification. The editor contacted Melinda and asked her to prepare an update.
