Chapter 524

The Monicut Armand looked up the elevator door opened (from afar and out walked Jack and Genevieve.

Pulling their luggage behind them, they looked as if they were traveling someplace far away.

Armand approached them and stopped Jack. "Come with me."

"I'm not interested." With his hand wrapped around Genevieve's waist, Jack asserted with an icy glint in his eyes. "Mr. Faulkner, step aside. My wife and I are in a hurry to get to the airport."

Armand sneered, "Jack, there's no way your private jet can leave Jadeborough if I don't allow it."

Jack narrowed his eyes. "Are you threatening me?"

"I'm just stating the truth." Throwing Genevieve a glance, Armand repeated in a solemn tone, "Come with me now. When you return, I'll not get in your way of wherever you want to go."

Since Jadeborough wasn't his turf, Jack's influence was limited there. At the same time, he was well aware that Armand's threat wasn't an empty one.

That aside, he was curious to find out what Armand still had hidden up his sleeves given his desperate situation.

In that moment, Jack handed his luggage to Genevieve before leaning in to her briefly before she quickly nodded.

She turned around and headed back into the house.

Armand instructed him, "Arrange for a pilot to come here. We will be staying at a residence for the rich, there was a helipad located on the top of the hill. As soon as a helicopter arrived to pick them both up, they arrived in just minutes on the lawn of a manor based on the address Armand had given him. A country manor in front of him before returning his attention to Armand. "Mr. Faulkner, did you bring me all this way just to see me? Armand plainly replied as he led him to the manor. The manor was simple. While the furniture was all made of
