

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 821 - Planning

While taking a look at the origin flame crystals, Jason noticed that none of them was as unique as it had been the case with Solaris.

Because of that, he truly believed that Solaris was a mutation which was quite interesting, considering that it was much stronger than normal origin flames.

However, at the same time the strongest origin flame crystals he could see also had their own uniqueness, which made them no worse than Solaris...or so Jason thought.

With that in mind, he left the store in which he had found the origin flame crystals, expecting to keep looking at the content of the other stores.

Thus, he kept strolling through the streets, slowly approaching the library that was his final destination.

In fact, there were two different libraries; one that looked like a huge dojo and was probably harboring all kinds of martial art techniques, and possibly even cultivation techniques while the other library stored knowledge.

A few hours passed while he paid a lengthy visit to every single shop in order to get to know what kind of items were priced higher or lower.

After he was done with his research, Jason finally arrived in front of the library which he entered without hesitation.

Without wasting too much time, he grasped the first book of the closest shelf to figure out its price, and halted in his tracks, a little bit dumbfounded.

[10 books of the library's first floor cost 1 Merit point!]

This astonished Jason greatly because the price was extremely expensive when compared to that of the Immortal eye.

It was an item at, or possibly above the Specta rank yet only cost 1 Merit point too!

However, it was also possible that the Immortal eye was not valuable in the five Primordial race's opinion, but the books inside the library, and other materials that were priced much higher, were more valuable to them.

With that in mind, his first thought was to figure out the prices of the books on the different floors before determining their worth for him, as his knowledge was not extensive.

In the end, the prices were roughly the same, and only the books on the highest floor were priced at 1 Merit point per book.

Given that, Jason first gathered all books he categorized as necessary, important, very important, interesting, and so on.

Through this, he would be able to come up with a proper plan to not use too many merit points while being able to procure everything he wanted.

Jason assumed that many books would more or less have the same information.

That was why he looked at them in a very detailed manner, trying to come up with the most cost-efficient solution.

Right now, it might look like he had many merit points, but Jason wanted to procure a great, body refinement technique because he was not even using one anymore.

Furthermore, he was in need of a much stronger cultivation technique because he had realized that even though the Mythic Essence technique was strong, in order to advance even faster, he had to be greedy.

Thus, he wanted a powerful body refinement technique, a better cultivation technique, and both a movement and a martial art technique.

It had been years since he had used a martial art technique, which decreased his possible combat prowess by a large margin.

This was also a part of the reason for his passing grade of the fifth trial to be so low.

Other than that, the Floating Sky movement technique had long since reached the Perfect mastery, and its use was slowly diminishing with time.

/The amount of mana he had was manifold higher than what his movement technique required, and the speed boost which he received was also not as much as it felt before.

As such, a new movement technique was also something he required.

With that in mind, he wanted to procure four techniques that were, if possible, at a much higher rank than the Heaven rank!

Grand races had at least one technique at the rank called Luna, just like the City Lord, but Jason's goal was much higher, and his greed to become much stronger was only increasing day by day!

With that technique, Jason would be able to use them for a long time, with the highest possible potency, which would increase his physical strength, his combat prowess, and the speed at which he cultivated by several times!

Right now, he and his soulbonds had to adjust to the enhancement they had undergone during the last three months.

However, once the adjustment period was over, he would be able to make use of everything he had learned and received inside the dungeon.

That way once he were to leave the dungeon, it would be with a much higher strength than he could have ever dreamed of reaching in such a short period of time!

Given everything he needed, and all kinds of other things he wanted to procure to advance even further, Jason knew that he had to spend his merit points carefully.

Fortunately, not a single merit point was deducted until he stored it inside his spatial ring which was something Jason realized when he walked around with the immortal eye, only to store it away much later.

This was quite advantageous because he could walk around with a variety of books and adjust the rewards he took by leaving certain items behind once he felt that they were less useful than other things he found.

Like this he would be able to figure out the best way to use 4489 Merit points!

That being said, he collected several books until he had a humongous pile of them, which Jason enveloped with his mana before he left the library.

He felt dumb doing something like that because storing them away would be much easier, but that was not something he could do for now.

Thus, he entered the second library that looked like a dojo, while being followed by a mountain of books.

Not only were there several floors inside the dojo-like library, but also multiple sections.

These included a plethora of topics which could be used as a means to organize the special techniques that were either used with one cultivation vein, multiple, with a specific affinity requirement, or even the necessity to possess certain special traits.

There were many more books Jason was interested in, and seeing that the price of the books on the first floor was similar to the first library's with 10 books costing 1 Merit point, he got a good idea.

'I could purchase a few hundred Terra ranked techniques and sell them at an auction house if I were to need money...if Heaven-ranked techniques are similarly cheap, I might as well try the same at a higher scale!'

With that thought, Jason first looked at the prices of all kinds of techniques, including cultivation techniques and body refinement techniques which he found on the different floors.

Shockingly enough, a Heaven-ranked technique ranged from 1 Merit point to 50.

He also found many more Luna ranked techniques than he could have estimated with the cheapest being priced at 100 merit points.

It was a simple martial art technique that seemed to be ordinary, and it was because of this that the price for the highest Luna ranked technique was so much higher than the lowest priced one.

In the end, it was priced at 1500 Merit points!

However, shockingly enough, Jason understood that he could procure almost three of the most expensive and also strongest Luna ranked techniques with the merit points he had procured.

Yet, this didn't interest him at all because he found two specific things at the highest floor of the dojo!

First, he found a gradeless technique at a pedestal, surrounded by several techniques at the rank that was called [Sun], which was the fourth rank of the technique ranking Jason figured out!

The Sun-ranked techniques piqued Jason's interest because he could afford them as the cheapest one cost 3000 Merit points.

However, despite being cheaper, the gradeless technique that was lying on a pedestal was what he was fixated on. It was glowing brightly, and it felt like his entire being was attracted to it!

Additionally, the technique's name was also unique, heightening his curiosity as it was called;

[Kanadi of a Primordial]

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 822 - Kanadi Of A Primordial

From what he was able to understand, the [Kanadi of a Primordial] was a gradeless technique that refined one's body in its entirety.

It was similar to the Runic circle of Unlimited enhancements, just that he wasn't enhanced but thoroughly refined!

However, that was only the case if the few words that described the entire technique were true.

In the end, the technique was described as gradeless because it would enhance someone's entire being according to one's bloodline.

This was interesting but Jason's first impression of the technique was not that great because only a portion of his bloodline was extremely powerful.

As such, a [Sun] ranked technique might be better for him to choose even if it was a little bit more expensive.

Yet, the more he thought about it, the more impressive the short description he read about the [Kanadi of a Primordial] became.

There were specific functions he hadn't perceived earlier, and it was able to enhance every trait of his body. This included his physique, his mana vein, his mana core, and so on.

Thus, it was truly comparable to the Runic circle of Unlimited enhancements.

With that in mind, Jason grasped the book that cost 2000 Merit points and put it in his spatial ring.

This left him with less than 2500 Merit points left for his remaining purchases.

Thus, he could purchase a better cultivation technique, a martial art technique, and a movement technique.

However, given the fact that Luna ranked techniques cost between 100 and 1500 Merit points, there shouldn't be an issue with that.

It was sad that he couldn't hastily purchase the better techniques because he was not even sure if his body would be able to cope with the potency of Sun-ranked techniques right now!

That was because only Superior races were able to wield them owing to their innate traits, and even then they had to reach a specific cultivation base first.

In the end, Jason had to learn more about the six ranks in which the races were categorized based on their strength, the difference between the races, and if the common race's strongest individual were truly only at the Specta stage.

Only now he begin to wonder about that because he had no idea that reaching Specta stage was considered to be an ordinary task by the Primordial races.

By learning about this, he realized that the universe was ginormous.

In comparison, Manyr was relatively small, and Jason was slowly comprehending that he had been very callous about everything.

Considering that the Elvyr race that had come to their rescue when the Great Argos war had wreaked havoc on Argos was the strongest higher race, Jason had taken everything he had gotten to know for granted.

Yet, recalling how most races didn't even know the Celestia race's aura or their name, he believed that something with his understanding of the overall situation concerned the race rankings was wrong.

This included the ranking of martial art techniques, and it was only now that Jason was slowly understanding why Luna had been so confident that both Jason and Jennifer wouldn't be able to find Luna-ranked techniques.

They were simply too valuable and rare for normal people to procure.

Thus, even powerhouses that reigned entire planets were not able to procure such techniques just because they wanted to.

Seeing hundreds of Luna ranked techniques in front of him, Jason first doubted if it was an illusion.

But if even the five Primordial races were barely able to procure just a few hundred Luna ranked techniques, followed by a handful of Sun ranked techniques, and one gradeless technique, they had to be especially rare.

Otherwise, the five races that governed a large part of the Universe would have been able to share more techniques despite the possibility of races other than Primordial Descendants obtaining them.

When realization struck him, Jason also understood that the sub-rankings in the technique's rankings were most likely much vast in the higher ranks than he initially expected.

With that in mind, he suddenly wondered how much longer it would take before he would be able to take revenge on the My?ldra, and Burane race.

They were the strongest races that had ever offended him, and the Ifrytor race was nothing in comparison.

Armed with Solaris' strength and capabilities that never ceased to increase and become stronger, he could feel that he could easily overwhelm the Ifrytor race.

Based on these thoughts, Jason knew that he had to purchase three Luna ranked techniques, even if it meant that he might not be able to wield the techniques to their fullest capabilities yet.

In the end, it was smart to purchase the strongest techniques that were the most suitable, instead of just buying something powerful.

Because of that, Jason spent more time than he initially wanted to inside the dojo.

Yet, instead of spending too many Merit points, he chose a select few items and was happy with his purchase.

He chose a cultivation technique that cost him 300 Merit points, a martial art technique that could be used with an enlarging weapon like Byakur which cost him 500 Merit points, followed by a movement technique that cost him 700 Merit points.

As such, his purchase ended with the gradeless [Kanadi of a Primordial] technique that cost him 2000 Merit points, the Low Luna ranked cultivation technique [Divine Maestra], the Low Luna ranked martial art technique [Bladed Ruyi Bang] and the Mid Luna ranked movement technique [Hermes Celeration].

All in all, he paid 3500 Merit points, leaving him with 989 Merit points for other purchases. He could choose between 1 Merit point for the Immortal eye or the 100 Merit points for the huge pile of books he was taking with him.

Thus, he calculated as if he had only 888 Merit points left while continuing to walk through the treasury of the Five Primordial races.

There were all kinds of things he wanted to do, and one of these things was to pay attention to the strength of races.

That being said, he returned back to the Library and took one of the unique books that was located on the highest floor.

The massive floor had a wide variety of books lined across the shelves, each of the books costing several hundred credits.

Before, the price would have been too much for him, even more so because the book he wanted to purchase cost 500 Merit points.

However, after giving it another thought, he had no problem purchasing the book he had taken a liking to.

That was because the book he was currently holding in his hands was in fact the Logbook about all races.

He would only have to open the book and think about the name of a specific race.

Within a moment, the book's content would change, giving him extensively compiled information pertaining to that specific race.

What made the book special was the fact that it contained the knowledge and data collected by the Primordial races. It meant that it was likely for this information to be thorough and accurate.

Furthermore, before purchasing it, Jason was even allowed to conduct a small trial. This was why he thought about the Ifrytor race because he was the most interested in this ordinary race that was said to be extremely weak.

After choosing the Ifrytor race, he would have switched it to the My?ldra race in order to figure out their strength. But, he was positively shocked to go through the information provided of the Ifrytor race.

'So...a weak common race like the Ifrytor race has at least one powerhouse at the peak of the Specta stage?!'

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 823 - Restless

Jason made huge gains by purchasing the Logbook about all races for 500 Merit points.

The moment he knew the name of a race that opposed him, he would be able to find out the strength of their strongest powerhouse.

This was extremely useful, and something he should definitely know if he were to offend any race.

In the end, the possibility of him offending someone was extremely high, and being a little prepared for every possible scenario was great.

With that in mind, he was glad to have purchased the Logbook even if it was extremely expensive.

Unfortunately, this meant that he was only left with 388 Merit Points.

It was not possible to purchase any kind of great technique with such low points but that was fine. He had purchased what he wanted and didn't require any more techniques.

The four techniques he had just purchased were already more than enough to cope up with, and Jason knew that he would require years to master them.

He even believed that he was being a little overconfident with the fact that a few years would be enough to master the technique.

Sighing deeply, Jason could only shake his head and leave the Library for good.

Now, instead of focusing on purchasing anything, he wanted to figure out something else.

Even if he was not sure where he would be teleported to once he left the dungeon, it was unlikely for his teleportation to be at a good spot.

Either, he would end up in the middle of the storm where he had entered the Chaos Obelisk, or he might be teleported above the Kinra island. But he had a sinking feeling that it was most likely buried deep underground owing to the movements of the Gigantic Island tortoise.

However, there was also the possibility that he might be teleported somewhere completely different, which was not exactly advantageous either.

Because of that, Jason was currently looking for a reward that allowed him to be teleported wherever he wanted.

Receiving such a reward would be great, and it might even allow him to emerge on Tagran. It was the place where Wisse and his master were probably waiting for him.

It was also highly likely that they had forgotten about him after all these years, but that was not something he knew for sure.

Jason only knew that Wisse's master was affine to the Chaos affinity, which meant that he or she should know the Chaos Emperor.

As such, Jason could narrow his search for the Chaos Emperor that would most likely be able to tell him more about his grandparents, if they were alive, and much more.

Unfortunately, Jason felt that he was too weak to start the search for his grandparents, let alone the Chaos Emperor. His instincts told him that he would die if he were to start searching now.

Owing to this instinct, he didn't grow restless. Instead of rushing things, Jason decided to focus on gaining a proper cultivation foundation as it was the most important.

Other than that, he didn't want to leave Manyr either.

Rather than wanting to leave Manyr, he had grown fond of the place much more than was the case with Argos. That was because the beasts and intelligent races could live harmoniously, and some even helped each other.

This was something that could have never existed on Argos, which was sad.

However, Jason understood why it had been like that on Argos. Both humans and the beasts had been too afraid and wary of each other, leading to them attacking one another.

Nevertheless, the fact that beasts and the intelligent races could live next to each other without too many issues was not the only thing Jason liked on Manyr.

The real reason for him to want to stay on Manyr was that he wanted to meet Jennifer again.

It sounded ridiculous to him because they hadn't been with each other for long. But it was almost as if she had bewitched him. Ever since they had separated, he thought about her more often than he wanted to acknowledge.

With that in mind, he felt that he should search for a reward that would teleport him to a place of his choice. Rather than relying on his luck, or purchasing something else with his last remaining Merit points, he preferred to go someplace he wanted to!

Through this, he took a proper look at all stores in the alleys of the city-like treasury.

This took quite some time in which he thoroughly observed every possible item. This helped him have a rough estimation of what items he might need if he had some Merit points left after he found the teleportation reward.

Fortunately, it didn't take him long to find the reward he had been looking for. Oddly enough there were more than a dozen different types of teleportation rewards.

As such, he took a look at the teleportation reward that allowed him to choose his destination irrespective of the distance.

Because of that, he had to pay 100 Merit points, which was clearly written on the reward sign.

Even though that was almost a third of what he had with him, Jason felt that it was worth the price. As long as he could avoid the uncertainty of emerging in the middle of nowhere, he would pay the amount.

With that in mind, he set aside 100 Merit points before choosing items according to the last 288 Merit points he had.

Unfortunately, this was easier said than done because there were simply too many things he wanted to purchase yet too little that he could actually purchase.

Thinking about this, he thought that purchasing techniques only for himself might have been a little bit unfair and selfish.

Thus, he returned to the dojo, looking for techniques his soulbonds could use.

To his misfortune, there was not even a single technique that had been customized for beasts. Additionally, the comprehension required to learn the techniques of intelligent races was extremely high.

Despite that, Jason couldn't help but halt in his tracks for a moment. Smiling faintly, he recalled something that was obvious, yet not easily perceptible.

'Don't my soulbonds receive an enhancement in their intelligence after they were bound to me?

They're sharing their strength with me, and the soulbond contract allows them to become more intelligent, wasn't that the case?'

Until now, Solaris was the soulbond that had gained the most intelligence from the soulbond contract.

Not only did it gain sentience, but it was also able to learn how to feel emotions, express itself, and much more.

With that thought, Jason wondered if he should purchase some Terra ranked techniques for his soulbonds to try and learn, followed by Heaven ranked techniques which they could learn afterward.

It might be a waste of merit points if it wouldn't work properly, but in that case, he could still auction off the techniques that his soulbonds couldn't use.

Through this, he wouldn't make any losses or minimize them.

Instead, his soulbonds gained the chance to show that they were more than normal beasts, that they could also use specific techniques of intelligent races.

He knew that it was necessary to pay attention to what kind of techniques he purchased because most required the usage of hands and feet

But by spending enough time inside the dojo, it was not a problem to find a few dozen techniques.

Thinking about it again, he didn't want or use all of his remaining Merit points for techniques.

Instead, there were also a few extremely rare materials that he wanted to purchase with his Merit points.

Even an unlimited fortune wouldn't allow him to purchase certain things on Manyr.

He knew that this was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to see so many useful things under one roof.? It would take an eternity for him to find some of the materials ever again.

With that in mind, Jason purchased all kinds of materials he could make use of in the future. The most expensive item cost 50 merit points and with that, the last step of his reward session was completed.

The last three years inside the dungeon had been extremely interesting.

Yet, at the same time, he couldn't help but feel a little bit odd because he believed that the Julandra region had changed more than it would normally be the case.

A span of three years was nothing for Cultivators and time seemed to move differently for them.

However, given the fact that the Inheritance sites had emerged on Kinra that had surfaced years ago, Jason couldn't help but feel as if it would be Deja-vu once again.

It felt similar to the time he awoke his primary Celestia bloodline, after which the Great Argos war had truly started.

With that in mind, Jason couldn't help but feel a little restless when he stared at the teleportation reward.

He had already chosen the Julandra region, or to be precise a location close to Luna's city. Now, the only thing he had to do was to use his merit points to activate the teleportation.

But... Why did he feel so restless right now?

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 824 - Returned

After he had distributed every single Merit point, Jason could teleport to the Julandra region as the reward to do so was already activated.

Yet, the first thing he did after activating the reward was to sit down in front of the portal. Crossing his legs, he began reading through the four techniques he had purchased for himself.

After purchasing them, they were finally unlocked for him to read beyond the first page that was more like a description.

As such, it was only now that Jason got to know what exactly the techniques he chose could do and how powerful they truly were.

As for the Divine Maestra cultivation technique, it would allow his cultivation speed to double at the bare minimum without making him feel any pain.

Meanwhile, the Bladed Ruyi Bang martial art technique focused on weapons that could enlarge, which were mostly spears.

Additionally, there was also a section dedicated to Broadswords and other weapons, as well as a detailed description on how one should use the enlarging function of a weapon.

Because of that, Jason was already curious on how he could make use of the technique in order to distract, or possibly outwit his opponent.

While the Bladed Ruyi Bang martial art technique was already interesting, this was even more so the case with the [Hermes Celeration] technique. It was the first movement technique he learned other than the Floating Sky and its sub-technique, the Weightless steps movement technique.

As such, a Luna ranked technique was extremely exciting, even more so because he was always prone to learning a better movement technique that allowed him to move faster.

In fact, he was always trying to increase his speed and turn it into his biggest asset apart from his eyes.

Unfortunately, it was never really possible for him to pursue what he wanted.

He knew that his eyes and other traits had been stronger, and more important than improving his movement speed.

Because of that, he felt like a small child who had received the present he had always wanted, a technique to increase his movement speed even further.

In the end, his movement speed was already fast, and by fusing with Petri, Peak Prismar stage cultivators looked like amateurs in comparison to him.

Even the Lesser puppets that had been replicas of the five primordial races were nothing in comparison to him. This meant that there weren't many beings, or races that were on par with him and at the same cultivation base!

This would be even less the case once he began to refine his entire being, and strengthen his body.

He was excited to figure out what exactly the technique called Kanadi of a Primordial could really do and how useful it was for him to practice the technique.

Unfortunately, he would have to procure a few resources to start practicing it like nutrition serums and other necessities.

It was also possible to practice without these things but the potency would be extremely low, and lesser than the normal if he were to cultivate.

With that in mind, Jason finished reading through the techniques' first few pages.

He got up from the ground and used the teleportation reward to bring him to the Julandra region.

Returning was the most important for now, and his body and mind were calm.

He was prepared for every possible scenario he might have to face after his return.

Jason was anxious as well as excited to leave the dungeon and hopefully meet Jennifer.

Because of that, Jason was not even bothered by the fact that the space around him twisted, followed by him being teleported away from the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant.

It was only after leaving the dungeon that Jason would understand that everything happened for a reason.

The time he spent inside the dungeon to pass the trials with the highest possible score, the Inheritance he received, followed by the rewards he obtained, would turn out to be much more important than he could ever imagine.

Oblivious to the importance of the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant and the changes it had caused within his mindset and the rest of his entire being, he was teleported through space.

In a blink of an eye, he was transported billions of light years through the vast universe, only to return to the Julandra region where he had been just a few years ago.

In the end, Jason didn't even notice that his appearance in the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant had attracted the attention of the five Primordial races.

The only thing they knew about him was that Jason had entered the Chaos Obelisk on Manyr and that he was a halfling.

Other than that, they didn't really know anything because the sentience of the dungeon didn't expose his identity or his personal information.

This protected Jason from the possible attack of the two Primordial races that were on bad terms with the Celestia race.

Yet, upon learning of Jason's existence, all five races had begun their preparations to search for him- the halfling who had received the Inheritance and survived it to tell the tale.

Even the Celestia race had launched an extensive research mission as only Yaldra knew of the existence of his son, and nobody else.

He never told anyone that he had a son because he hadn't known about this for a very long time either.

However, after he found out about his son and the fact that Jason didn't want to meet him, it was impossible to share the fact with others. The Celestias were a pure and prideful race, that wouldn't accept Jason just like that.

He was too weak and had tarnished their reputation and blood just by existing. Thus Yaldra remained silent, glad that the Celestia race assumed that the halfling was from one of the other four Primordial races.

Yet, in the end, he still sent out his own troupe of trusted soldiers.

They were supposed to send out the troops of the races they govern with the final goal to find and capture Jason alive before anyone else could find out about his existence.

This confused the soldiers of the Celestia race at first because they thought it was best to simply spy on the halfling before doing anything. It shouldn't be difficult because there were hundreds of races under their control.

But instead of spying, Yaldra wanted to have the halfling in his grasp. His orders astonished many soldiers, but they still obeyed as they were supposed to.

Thus, the soldiers began combing through the vast universe while ensuring that they didn't attract any attention. However, this was easier said than done because all five Primordial races wanted to find Jason!

Not attracting any attention and finding someone specific as quickly as possible, before anyone else could were the exact opposites of each other, and that was what the Five Primordial races were fully aware of.

As such, they contacted each other for the first time in eons, trying to figure out which of the Primordial races had been able to give birth to a halfling.

They wanted to figure out as much information as possible about this mysterious halfling. Yet, contrary to their expectations, all five races were doing the exact same, but without any success!

Meanwhile, Jason finally returned to the Julandra region and emerged from the portal, only to look around the familiar place he had emerged.

"What is this...weird presence?!?"

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 825 - Changes

When he emerged in the air above the plains, Jason first took a deep breath to invigorate himself.

Afterward, he tried to figure out in which direction the city governed by Luna was located.

Thus, he took a good look around after inserting mana into his eyesight. This allowed him to find what he was looking for just a moment later.

The city was far away from his current location, and Jason flew towards it at a slow pace, without trying to attract any attention.

That was something he felt to be necessary because the presence that permeated the entire region around him was gloomy, making him feel uncomfortable.

Because of that, he first tried to message both Jennifer and the City Lord using the messenger card, but nobody answered.

Thus, he entered the city, but instead of approaching the City Lord's abode, he first walked through the crowded alleys.

There, he first ordered food from the busiest stall in order to procure information about what all had occurred after the Kinra Island submerged.

Hence, for the remainder of the day, he went from one stall to another, listening to the people eagerly talk amongst each other. Jason didn't speak with anyone if one excluded the stall owners he talked to for ordering food.

In the end, these hours turned out to be a fruitful investment. He had figured out quite a lot about the happenings in the Julandra region, and Jason couldn't help but feel a little bit shocked.

Several races had infiltrated the Julandra region, forcing the Devir and Aeus race to join forces just to survive.

With that arch-rivals had turned into the closest comrades in order to protect their lands and people from the infiltrators. Yet, humans were still subdued.

However, this wasn't the case for long because a terror attack had killed the majority of the Aeus and Devir race's nobles. The culprits had ambushed the nobles who had participated in a commemoration ceremony marking the completion of two years of the battle in which the race's warriors had held back the infiltrators.

The ceremony was not only a celebration to honor those who had fought the other races for such a long time, but also to set up new plans to increase their defenses in order to hold back the infiltrators forever, if possible.

Unfortunately, the ceremony ended in the worst possible way as a bomb created out of an extremely unique material detonated. The blast was so catastrophic that not even the remains of the people could be found.

And that material was none other than the Immortal eye!

When Jason heard this, he immediately thought of Luna. He questioned himself if that was the reason for her to request an Immortal eye to be brought to her.

'She...asked for an Immortal eye, just to create a bomb...killing the Aeus and Devir race's nobles?' Jason wondered. He was confused about the reason for her to do something like this and in such a perilous period at that.

Scratching the back of his head in confusion, his mind required a few seconds to process the information about the happenings that followed after the terror act had been caused.

In fact, Luna's name was not even mentioned or linked to the attack. What had been mentioned instead was the fact that the perpetrator was already identified and a warrant had been issued.

The same applied to the perpetrator's disciple, which caused Jason to stiffen for a moment.

'Jennifer was already on everybody's radar in her original form, but now even her disguise should be useless...That..is bullshit!'

He had almost cursed out when he heard that Jennifer was being searched by the Devir and Aeus race. However, fortunately enough, the two races had more than enough to do.

They had focussed on appointing new, capable individuals as nobles in order to allow them to lead combat units in the war with the other races.

Following the explosion and loss of many powerful beings of both the Devir and Aeus race, the Manyrs were starting to riot too.

They demanded equal rights as everyone else had or threatened to join the ranks of the infiltrators, and support them by all means.

Forced by the threat the Manyrs had issued, the Aeus and Devir race accepted them in their rows.

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 826 - Refining Technique

After several months had passed since he bound the Sacred Squirrel to his soul world, they had finally created a fortified soul conjunction.

In fact, all of his soulbonds had now a fortified soul conjunction with him. All of them had a strong connection to him, and now all of them were a big family with Jason as its core.

That was great and allowed them to improve quite a lot.

It was mostly based on the fact that the soul conjunction had allowed the Stigma to be engraved on the Sacred Squirrel.

He named the Sacred Squirrel, Sira, who was currently in a state similar to hibernation just as it was the case with the other soulbonds.

This made it quite difficult for him to use the Foretelling blessing that required the blessed energy which only Sira could produce.

Owing to that, Jason had to wait until he could have another foretelling just as it was the case at the Tribe chief gathering.

Because of that, he had to wait for a little until he had the necessary information to start searching Jennifer.

With that in mind, he searched for a lodging place that he could use for the next few days, or weeks if the hibernation would take longer.

There were not many leads to look for Jennifer, to begin with.

As such, utilizing his time to become stronger was currently more important because he felt that Jennifer would need the help of someone stronger than her the moment they met.

Yet, considering that three years had passed since they had entered the Legacy trial of the inheritance site together, Jason couldn't help but believe that she should have already been close to entering the Ascension stage.

At least, her strength should have skyrocketed after she left the Inheritance site.

In fact, Jason believed that Jennifer had already begun to merge her soul with the vessels of her. Her combat prowess must be just a step away from the Ascension stage, if that was not something she had long since attained.

However, what Jason noticed was that simply thinking about Jennifer wouldn't bring him or her anything.

Right now, he was unable to reach her, and the only thing he could do was to message her a few times, in the hope to reach her.

Other than that, searching for someone who was hiding from two races was like searching for a needle in a stack of hay.

Thus, after he found a lodging facility for which he paid with some of the cultivation stones he had left, Jason focused on himself.

First, he read through one of the brand new cultivation techniques he had purchased, trying to gain a basic understanding of it before he moved on to the Kanadi of a Primordial technique.

Instead of starting to practice the techniques right off the bat, Jason wanted to understand the techniques to a certain extent before doing anything else.

Thus, two weeks passed in which he learned the first stage of all four techniques he had purchased.

After that, there was not much for him to do, and the first thing he did was to purchase all kinds of necessities to practice the Kanadi of a Primordial technique.

In fact, the technique seemed extraordinary but the way it was exerted felt extremely easy.

At least that's what Jason figured out by reading the first stage.

He had taken a glimpse at the second phase of the technique, which made him realize that the difficulty to practice the technique would increase exponentially with every new phase.

However, that was more than fine with him because he simply believed that the more difficult a technique was, the more benefits he would obtain.

Thinking back he realized that he never had to face any major issues in learning a new technique as he was eager to learn more.

So, the higher the difficulty the greater his motivation to excel at it.

This allowed his comprehension to considerably improve even if the difficulty of the technique ought to exceed his capabilities.

In the end, he had been conditioned to this mindset since it took almost 10 years to awaken his mana eyes, or to be precise, Emperor Eyes!

After purchasing the goods he was required to practice the Kanadi of a Primordial technique, Jason couldn't help but feel that the most difficult to practice was to have sufficient funds at all times.

He barely purchased enough resources for a few practice sessions, and a large margin of the cultivation stones he had preserved from years ago, was exhausted in an instant.

Because of that, he felt a little bit bad, but at the same time, Jason knew that it was not difficult to earn a fortune as long as he forged special weapons out of perfectly purified ingots.

That hadn't been a problem before he entered Kinra Island, and now, this should be even less problematic because he and Solaris had improved quite a lot.

In the end, the Runic circle of Unlimited enhancements was only a bonus that allowed him to increase his capabilities and that of his soulbonds further.

With that in mind, he was confident that the weapons he could forge were even more powerful now. So far, it had been impossible for him to improve his knowledge about runes or special alloys, let alone other means that were important to forge, but that was not an issue.

Rather, Jason had purchased several books in the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant's treasury that would give him the knowledge he was hoping to receive.

Thus, the only thing he had to do was to read and comprehend them.

Wanting to start reading as quickly as possible, he returned to the lodging and took out the bathtub he had purchased earlier. He then filled it with crystal clear ice before he heated it up.

Afterward, he released the suction force of his body, pulling all three cultivation energies in a radius of a kilometer towards him. He then removed his clothes before he entered the bathtub that released a unique scent owing to the nutrition serums he had filled into it.

Letting his pores open, Jason absorbed even the smallest trace of nutrition followed by the surroundings mana.

The sudden lack of mana which the other citizens noticed caused them to feel frustrated because there were some other Cultivators that had wanted to cultivate.

However, owing to the laws employed by the city, the stronger force was allowed to absorb the energies in the surrounding.

If someone didn't like that, they could either change their lodging or rent a cultivation room that was concealed from the outside, actively releasing the respective energy they required to cultivate.

That being said, Jason was not bothered about it anymore, and he had more than enough time to follow the descriptions the Kanadi of a Primordial technique gave him.

Through this, he knew the proportions of his cultivation energy and nutrition required to create a mixture that would nurture his entire being as long as he used the mixture in the proper circulation movements.

Initially, everything seemed simple, but everything was much more difficult than Kyle could have assumed at first. It was mostly based on the fact that the Kanadi of a Primordial enhanced every single trait of one's entire being simultaneously.

In the end, this included his soul world, his Emperor Eyes, his mana core, mana veins, and physique, which were all already enhanced by the Inheritance he had received inside the dungeon.

This meant that the enhancements brought forth by the Kanadi of a Primordial would take much longer to show any effects which were something that bothered Jason.

However, little did he know that these enhancements were much stronger than he could first assume. Being a halfling of a Primordial race had granted him with the highest possible enhancement from the technique. The said technique had been created by the Primordials that were also known as the Originators!

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 827 - Foretelling

Exerting the Kanadi of a Primordial technique caused Jason to feel a little bit dissatisfied.

Not only were the costs of a single practice extremely high, but the gains he received were not as per his expectations.

Instead, given his current situation, Jason knew that his strength had to increase as quickly as possible.

Because of that, he switched from practicing the Kanadi of a Primordial that was a technique with long-term gains to the new cultivation technique he had procured.

After understanding the first stage of the technique without too many difficulties, Jason could start practicing it.

He didn't waste any time and used his brain that had been refined and enhanced over and over again in order to gain the most benefits.

Having a refined and enhanced brain helped him easily cultivate for an entire week. He was slowly getting more comfortable in the way the technique demanded him to circulate the mana inside his body.

He was still far away from perfection and his movements were still crude, which was something Jason found to be ridiculous considering that he had always been good at controlling mana.

However, with the new cultivation technique, he had to control more than 20 different streams of mana inside his body that had to be circulated through him with extreme precision.

As if that wasn't a daunting task, the technique presented another hurdle in front of him by requiring the amount of mana to be exactly the same in every single mana stream.

Through this, the more mana he absorbed the more his cultivation accelerated, moving it through his body.

Unfortunately, the speed at which he could cultivate for now was little in comparison to the maximum limit of the Divine Maestra technique's first stage.

Despite that, Jason could increase his cultivation pace exponentially as long as he remained fully focused.

As such, at the end of the week, he had almost reached half of the required liquefied mana drops he needed in order to start compressing the dome crystal. Once that was done, it would allow him to be at the Peak of the Prismar stage, solely based on his cultivation base!

His strength was much higher than his cultivation base, but Jason knew that both could have been much higher if he were to stop bothering about maintaining a high weaponry, and martial art, or affinity proficiency.

But that was important because he had to make use of his strength with proper techniques. Otherwise, his cultivation base and brute strength could be high, but his true strength would reduce drastically over time.

With that in mind, Jason stopped cultivating after a week because he sensed that his soulbonds were finally waking up after almost a month had passed.

Their hibernation was over and they had finally adjusted to the enhancements they had undergone.

In the end, every single trait of their entire being had been enhanced, whether it were their cultivation veins, their vessel, their physique, and much more.

Thus, Jason was excited to see them once again, which made him instinctively open his soul world to the outside.

It was only a few moments later that Sira, Spyro and Solaris emerged from the soul world, before they clung to Jason, claiming their usual spots as before.

Following that Artemis and Petri followed suit in their smallest form and they moved towards their old, familiar position like usual.

In the beginning, Jason didn't notice much of a difference because Spyro and Solaris could change their form whenever they wanted.

However, in the case of Artemis and Petri, their appearance looked much more refined, sharp, and deadlier than before. Meanwhile, Sira's silver emblems with golden outlines on the back had grown a little bit, looking as if it was attached to her Stigma.

Despite their outer appearance having changed only a little bit, the outer side of his soulbonds was not as important as their inside!

Jason felt tremendous changes within his soulbonds, which made him smile at them proudly.

As such, he spent some time with them inside the small room he had lodged before he began to distribute the techniques he had purchased.

It was not easy to make his soulbonds read, but he wanted them to use their improved intelligence in order to do something useful with it.

He had successfully distracted Artemis with a technique about the ice affinity, and how it could be used properly, keeping her occupied for hours.

Meanwhile, Spyro received a few more techniques the Spiral path used, followed by Solaris receiving a fire affinity-based technique that was similar to the Dragon fire, yet more versatile.

On the other hand, Petri received a technique that was based on the enhancement of curses which was something that interested Jason too.

Only Sira didn't receive a single technique because techniques with blessings were rare to find, and not that useful for the Sacred Squirrel's specific blessings.

But she wasn't going to sit idle as Jason had thought of something he wanted her to do.

As such, by allowing Sira to enter his mana core for the first time, he wanted to use her blessed energy to activate the foretelling blessing, which worked rather easily.

Instead of causing any trouble, the blessed energy was smoothly transferred from the Sacred Squirrel inside his body, before it was used to activate the foretelling blessing.

Afterward, he used a single thought to let the foretelling blessing know what he was eager to find out.

[Where is Jennifer?]

His question was crystal clear, and after a large amount of blessed energy was used up, Jason's eyes turned milky. Numerous pictures flashed through his mind of something that would occur in the future.

The blessing was unable to tell him what was happening right now, which Jason noticed too late. But it was not problematic because he was able to figure out where she was.

And oddly enough it was not even that far away!

In fact, he knew the place she was hiding in, which confused him a little bit because he didn't recall telling her where exactly it was located.

It was the elemental crystal cave in which he had been teleported when he had emerged on Manyr. According to the foretelling blessing, she was being hunted by strong beings at the Ascension stage that had found clues of her being near the area.

Thus, Jason couldn't help but feel a little bit helpless about the situation. Only now did he notice something specific about the foretelling blessing he hadn't known beforehand.

It might also be a coincidence, but it would be an extremely rare one because the pictures that flashed through Jason's mind were from the next full moon!

This felt weird because the next full moon was still three weeks away, and if he was fast enough, it might even be possible for him to reach the location during that period.

However, in order to achieve this, he had to start moving.

With that in mind, he retracted his soulbonds into his soul world who were intrigued about the techniques they had begun to read, only to be pulled away by Jason.

This annoyed them, but instead of being disgruntled, they sensed how serious he was.

Thus, they remained quiet, and Sira returned to the soul world.

Normally Jason would allow Artemis to enter his mana core now because he would be able to fly much faster using her wings.

But instead of doing so, he told her to cultivate as much as possible, knowing that a big battle was going to start in three months. Thus, it would be best if she were to reach the highest possible combat prowess before that.

Meanwhile, he told his other soulbonds to do the same, before he left the city. Simultaneously, he kept practicing the movement sequences of the [Hermes Celeration] technique that allowed him to increase his speed by manifold once he mastered it.

'I will be fast enough!!' He could only think, hoping for the best as he rushed in the direction of the elemental cave!

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 828 - Found Her!

Flying with the fastest pace Jason could achieve, he reached the area around the elemental crystal cave only three weeks later.

It was not yet a full moon, but there was not much time left.

He was already close to the spot he had seen in the pictures that had flashed through his mind due to the foretelling ability.

Because of that, Jason was still relatively calm, even more so because his proficiency in the Hermes Celeration movement technique had improved quickly.

It had yet to reach the basic mastery, and Jason knew that he was quite far away from reaching that level.

But that was not important because the speed enhancement he received was already much higher than had been the case with the Floating Sky movement technique.

Because of that, Jason had no reason to complain.

Rather, he felt that he was doing quite fine. Now, the only issue he was currently facing was the question of whether he would be strong enough to defeat someone at the Ascension stage.

He had never fought someone at the Ascension stage, but the fact didn't make him nervous.

If he were, to be honest, his enhancements were more than enough to put him on a pedestal, increasing his strength to an extent that was much higher than anyone else could reach.

In fact, when he was still inside the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant, Jason had been able to procure information about the unique state of his mana.

It required much more mana than one would usually need to liquefy a single drop of mana.

In the end, the answer to this was quite simple.

It was a racial trait that made him require more mana than others for every single advancement after crossing the Mortal stage.

This was quite interesting, but he also got to know that one could imitate this unique trait by using special cultivation techniques.

Jason had come across a few of those special cultivation techniques when he had been looking for the Divine Maestra technique, and the finds he made had been quite interesting.

Astonishingly, there were even techniques that could create high-quality mana drops from the purest essence of transmuted mana.

Through this, one's affinity would become much stronger, which was quite interesting to know. Jason believed that he would meet much stronger opponents in the future that used similar techniques.

Hence, he was hoping to find and practice with some of them.

It might not be something that he would encounter on Manyr, but that was perfectly fine with him.

He still had a long way to go and his path ahead was riddled with tasks he had yet to accomplish.

As such, he calmed down his excitement to fight many opponents with unique cultivation, martial art, movement, and other techniques, while continuing to wait for them in the future.

There was less than one day left before the full moon would shine on the barren lands, turning it into a land filled with brightness for one, single night.

With a calm mind, Jason waited for time to pass, while flying in the sky at a high altitude.

He kept his eyes trained on the landscape below, ready to dive the moment he spotted Jennifer.

He was being restless because he believed that the pictures he had seen thanks to the foretelling blessing showed her injured!

Even though Jennifer's appearance had changed a lot if he recalled the pictures correctly, the injuries she had sustained over the course of time were worsening her situation.

Based on the picture, she appeared to be more refined, beautiful, and full of vigor. Despite that, the exhaustion, and the fear of the unknown seemed to be overwhelming her.

Jason believed that Jennifer was extremely strong, but he didn't know the entire truth of the situation she was in.

In fact, what he knew were just rumors out of which he created his own theory.

As such, he was not sure since how long she had been hiding,? how many beings were truly looking out for her, let alone how strong the beings that wanted to find her truly were.

With that in mind, Jason figured that he would be dragged into Jennifer's mess the moment he helped her.

Yet, that didn't deter him because he already knew it beforehand.

And it was perfectly fine because he would never allow someone he liked to be kidnapped, injured, or possibly even killed, not as long as he was still alive.

He had too many regrets about the past and what he could have done.

Thus, giving his all to protect Jennifer, who was the only person he truly liked on Manyr, was the bare minimum he could do.

Otherwise, what kind of friend would he be?

Thinking about being friends with Jennifer made Jason suddenly feel odd because he was not sure how true that was.

Were they truly friends, or had there been more when they were together?

Jason believed that there had been more to their relationship than friendship, but they had never received a chance to have a talk.

It was always a rather serious topic to talk about one's relationship, even more so as Cultivator.

In the end, their schedule was messed up, and the moment he entered the Chaos Obelisk, it had been over either way.

Three years had passed, and Jason was not even sure how he felt about anything anymore. He just wanted to help Jennifer, because he believed that she was important enough to be saved from severe injury.

Yet, at the same time, Jason clearly felt that he wouldn't sacrifice his life for her because his soulbonds would die with him.

Even if Jennifer was important, his soulbonds were his family, and he would sacrifice himself for their survival if necessary, and possible.

As such, Jason knew that his soulbonds were more important to him than Jennifer.

And even if he would ever like her more than his soulbonds, which was impossible to ever happen because his soul was not connected to them in a literal sense, he didn't know what Jennifer thought about him, to begin with.

With that in mind, he shook his head, averting his attention to properly observe his surroundings.

He was trying to find Jennifer and the beings that pursued her.

His previous uncertainty about the question of whether he was able to defeat beings at the Ascension stage was washed away as if it had never existed.

This was the case because he sensed unique changes about Artemis.

She seemed to have continued digesting the enhancements the Runic circle of Unlimited enhancements gave her after she had liquefied one million drops of mana.

It would take a few months at the bare minimum until the dome crystal would be solidified, and that was more than fine with Jason.

Rather, Artemis was exceeding his expectations once again because her cultivation speed had further accelerated.

However, that was not only the case with Artemis because his other soulbonds were the same.

Like her, they were accelerating their cultivation speed by fully digesting the enhancement the inheritance of the Dungeon of the Primordial Descendant brought forth!

This made Jason happy because he knew just how mighty the enhancements he had received were.

Knowing that his soulbonds received the same enhancements was something he would never complain about.

Thus, only when he saw slightly familiar energy fluctuations even if they had changed a lot shooting over the barren lands with a rapid speed, did he avert his attention.

Those fluctuations were being followed by more than 10 beings at the Ascension stage and he shot at them after taking a deep breath.

While looking into the sky for a mere moment, he saw the bright full moon.

Despite the fact that he would join the fray, Jason was unable to stop himself from smiling as he mumbled.

"Artemis, it's time, let's clean up a little mess!"

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 829 - Rescue

Initiating the fusion with Artemis, he dove towards Jennifer and the ten beings that pursued her.

Without too much of a hassle, he figured out that Jennifer had yet to reach the Ascension stage.

Yet, her speed was on par with the beings at the Initial phase of the Ascension stage, indicating that they had reached it not long ago.

It looked like their souls were not fully fused with their vessel.

This was quite an advantage for both Artemis and Jason because it meant that their final strength would be much lower than that of a proper Ascension stage cultivator.

In fact, it might be close to that, but Jason's worry was fueled by the appearance of a Mid rank Ascension stage cultivator, or even someone stronger.

It was clear that the Aeus and Devir race didn't think too highly of Jennifer, which was great.

Jason was glad that the two races hadn't sent out stronger Cultivators to finish off Jennifer.

It was most likely owing to the fact that the Aeus and Devir race including the Manyrs were too focused on fighting against the other races that were infiltrating the Julandra region.

Jason didn't care about that, even a tiny bit, and the races could attack whoever they wanted.

He was only interested in figuring out what happened to Jennifer and Luna, followed by one particular race he was eager to find out more about- the Shadow Walkers!

The fact that they were on Manyr revealed two possibilities that Jason hadn't thought of before.

First, the Shadow walkers could have entered Argos knowing that there were humans with the Maest cultivation path.

They could have a plan of using humans in order to do something on Manyr which might be their home planet.

Or, the second possibility was that the Shadow walkers had simply expanded their reach.

After they found the human race on Argos, they could have made use of the soul world, and soul awakening, allowing them to become stronger.

In the latter possibility, the Shadow Walkers wouldn't have been on Manyr for a long time, but that was the less likely possibility if Jason were to be honest.

Thus, he simply didn't mind it for now, and he just hoped to encounter Lux, who might be somewhere close...closer than Jason might think!

Yet, for now, something else was much more important. This caused Jason to use the strengthened moonlight affinity to strengthen his mana tremendously.

By circulating the strengthened moonlight transmuted mana through his body, he exerted the Hermes Celeration movement technique, increasing his strength tremendously.

He was still flying towards Jennifer and the beings at the Ascension stage, but despite the strong mana currents he released nobody had noticed him yet.

That was owing to the fact that he had been at a comparatively high altitude enabling him to see everyone entering the range of his sight instantaneously.

Using his great eyesight that had been further enhanced through the Runic circle of Unlimited enhancements, Jason was able to see everything down to the finest detail.

Owing to the long way he had to take in order to arrive near Jennifer, the fusion with Artemis was already completed before he reached them.

As such, his Arctic aura along with the two Stigmas on his forehead were fully released, and everything was intertwined in the moonlight affinity.

Thus, his overall strength increased by around 70%, making him extremely powerful.

However, that was not everything he was using. Instead, it was just the beginning!

Releasing the divine energy that had also been strengthened by the dungeon's inheritance, he intertwined it with his aura and the mana which he circulated through his body.

Owing to that, his strength increased further, allowing him to reach a breathtaking speed, making it seem like a sky blueish- silver star was shooting through the cloudless sky.

In the end, it was just Jason, but it didn't take Jennifer and her pursuers a long time to notice him.

In fact, the moment he released his divine energy, everything changed because his Arctic aura enlarged several times over, filling a part of the sky.

Despite realizing that something was approaching them with a shocking velocity, the beings at the Ascension stage ignored it. They believed that it was simply an attack shot by a being at the Mid Ascension stage just because it was boring.

Yet, it was only when it was already too late that they were able to perceive that something was wrong, that something in the ginormous hue was moving.

There was no attack of a Mid Ascension stage beast, but only Jason, who reached the Ascension stage,? was the closest to Jennifer.

It had almost reached the overly exhausted halfling, but it was just at that moment, when the Ascension stage being was certain that it had caught Jennifer, that the remaining air left its lungs.

Following that, it heard loud cracks, only to realize that it was, in fact, its spine that had issued these sounds.

Only a moment later, it was catapulted to the ground due to the impact of Jason's dive that had attained a terrifying pace. It was halted on the back of the being at the Ascension stage.

After its back or more specifically, its spine was broken, Jason's dive was halted. But his Arctic aura had yet to cause any effects, which it did without any delay as it spread through the surroundings. The aura reached Jennifer and the 10 beings at the Ascension stage.

They wanted to release their own aura in order to block off Jason's, but with a shocked expression they realized that this was not possible.

Their aura was inferior in front of Jason's arctic aura that broke their aura apart, before freezing the clothes of the Ascension stage beings.

Following that, it seeped inside their body, freezing the hair, nails, feathers, and skin of the Ascension stage cultivators.

Every cell of the beings was affected by the Arctic aura that restricted their movements instantaneously making them go rigid.

Through this, Jason's speed, which was already higher than that of the beings at the Ascension stage, received an additional boost, increasing his chances of victory by a huge margin.

However, that was not something he required, to begin with.

Both the divine energy and moonlight affinity were enhancing Jason to the extent at which the being at the Initial phase of the Ascension stage could only plead with him to let it survive.

In fact, Cultivators, at the Initial phase of the Ascension stage would be powerful enough to fight hundreds of beings that were at a slightly lower cultivation base.

But in the end, their raw strength was 'only' three times higher than that of beings at the Peak Prisma stage.

This was owed to the fact that one's vessel and soul hadn't been fully fused yet, which would take some time for both sides to adjust to each other and become more compatible.

Thus, Jason didn't fear fighting against the Ascension stage beings in front of him, as their strength was only three times higher than that of a being at the Peak Prisma stage.

And, in the end, they didn't look extremely powerful either, based on the expressions they showcased the moment Jason arrived in the middle of their high-speed chase!

Dumbfounded by Jason's combat prowess whose cultivation base was only between the Mid and Late Prisma stage, they didn't even realize the vibrant smile that emerged on Jennifer's dead-tired face the moment she understood who had come to her rescue.

'He... is still alive!!'

GOD'S EYES

Chapter 830 - Welcome Back

After releasing Byakur, Jason didn't even take a single glance at the being whose spine he had just broken.

Instead, he exerted the Hermes Celeration technique with moonlight transmuted mana and the divine energy that was merged within.

The combined force allowed him to catapult himself right in front of the closest Ascension stage cultivator that was in fact an Aeus, whose wings were already about to freeze.

Jason's appearance was similar to that of an Aeus, yet, completely different, which was confusing.

Yet, instead of worrying about this, the Aeus lifted the spear it was holding in an attempt to deflect Jason's attack.

It was only then that it noticed that Byakur started to shrink the moment it was supposed to collide with the spear.

It was barely a fraction of a second later that Jason thrust out with Byakur that enlarged once again, reaching the size of a normal short sword.

Piercing through the neck of the astonished Aeus, Byakur finished it off.

The Aeus took its last breath without knowing what or how Jason was able to avoid the spear that was ought to block his attack.

Without looking back, Jason simply grasped the dying Aeus before he threw it in the direction of the biggest group of Cultivators that was about to attack him.

This allowed him to distract them for a fraction of a second. It was more than enough to enlarge Byakur while manifesting several hundreds of icicles in a radius through which his Arctic aura permeated the surroundings.

Following that, the icicles that had been manifested out of divine energy had merged with the moonlight transmuted mana. The use of the drastically enhanced ice affinity of Artemis, pointed towards the group before they were shot out.

It was just a moment later that Jason heard several painful cries, only for his eyes that had turned sky blue to perceive something from his right.

The foresight blessing that had also received severe enhancements owing to Sira's cultivation process and the Runic circle's enhancements allowed him to perceive an attack from his right.

Thus, he didn't pay any more attention to the group of Cultivators he had just attacked with the icicles.

Instead, he manifested a sky blueish-silver wall of flames in that direction before he shot upwards into the sky.

Afterward, dozens of fireballs of the same color manifested around him before they were thrown in that direction.

At the same time, a fireball exploded behind him pushing Jason in the direction of the attack.

Flapping his wings to maintain his balance, he smiled lightly.

He felt exhilarated at finally being able to control his body and affinities almost perfectly, while he inserted more mana in Byakur simultaneously.

Through this, the longsword began to vibrate lightly as he slashed out at the Devir, who had attempted to attack him backhandedly, using his entire strength.

With enough mana that was strengthened by divine energy and the moonlight affinity circulating through Byakur, in addition to the extraordinary physical strength of Jason, he was able to overwhelm the Devir when they first clashed upon each other.

Forcing the Devir to retreat, Jason's eyes began to gleam brightly.

He instinctively exerted the strengthened version of the petrification curse, which was more than enough to restrict the Devir for a short moment.

After all, the curses he harbored had also been enhanced through the customized Inheritance he had received inside the dungeon!

Using this momentum to lean his body forward, he thrust Byakur into the Devir's abdomen, who could only gasp in shock. Simultaneously, he also released the sky blueish-silver flame that began to suddenly envelop its blade.

Owing to that, it was only a moment later that the Devir was on the brink of death.

As it took its last breaths, the number of opponents Jason had to defeat had decreased by one.

However, the fight was far from over, and the opponents that had been hit by the icicles might be injured, but this didn't mean they were dead.

They were visibly affected by the freezing property of his ice affinity that had undergone several amplifications, yet that didn't mean Jason could lower his guard.

Yet, he kept his cool and used a fraction of a second to fill the entire area with his Arctic aura. He enclosed it with icicles and sky blueish-silver fireballs before he shot them out towards the remaining opponents.

A moment later, he turned his head to take a quick glance at Jennifer to see how she was faring.

Seeing that she was fine, he smiled lightly before he returned his attention to the fight.

He might be overwhelming his opponents right now, but Jason knew that he should never underestimate his opponents. There might be existences similar to the Primordial races, whose imitations aka the lesser puppets, had already been more powerful than him!

Thus, Jason remained vigilant even after his Emperor Eyes had swept through his opponents.

He noticed that not a single sign inside their body indicated that they were powerful, let alone that they possessed any kind of unique cultivation technique.

As such, they were just normal cultivators, without anything special about them.

Because of that, Jason felt that the fight was not as intense as he had initially presumed it to be.

However, that was just another sign that clearly indicated to him how powerful he had become throughout the last three years he spent in the dungeon.

Knowing that he didn't waste his time was great, and even more so was figuring out that he was already able to defeat someone at the Ascension stage.

According to his cultivation base, he should be quite far from reaching that stage after all!

Thus, he was overjoyed about his current combat prowess, and couldn't hold back his excitement anymore. It was clearly visible in the Arctic aura that became even stronger due to his emotions just like it was the case for normal Celestias!

Through this, his control of everything that had to do even remotely with the ice affinity became much easier. It allowed Jason to control even more icicles and fireballs with which he attacked the remaining beings at the Ascension stage.

After throwing the icicles and fireballs at his opponents, he heard their pained cries reverberating through the surrounding, but Jason didn't show any mercy.

Instead, he continued to manifest more batches of icicles and fireballs which he once again flung at his opponents.

Owing to Artemis' trait to convert moonlight in mana...or what Jason presumed it to be, he could continue to use up tremendous amounts of mana until the full moon would be over, but that was not what he did.

Instead, he threw only a few batches of hundreds of icicles and fireballs at his opponents before he began to exert the Hermes Celeration technique.

Finishing off the remaining opponents one after another, Jason simultaneously picked up their spatial rings before appearing in front of Jennifer just a moment later.

With a bright smile on his face, Jason slowly terminated the fusion he had with Artemis, reverting to his original appearance as his golden eyes stared straight at Jennifer.

Unbeknownst to Jennifer, the seemingly simple eye contact she made with Jason brought back vivid memories of her recent horrific past.

Every single horrifying incident she had witnessed or been a part of was etched into her memory.

Despite that, somehow after seeing Jason, the intensity of those memories visibly decreased.

She was not scared of them, not anymore.

Instead, Jennifer felt oddly reassured as she returned Jason's smile, a single tear trickling down her cheek as she said.

"Welcome back...dummy!"
