xxiii - Gilga-Mess

Australia, 1013

THE FIRST THING PAULA NOTICED WAS THE DEAD SERVANT ON THE GROUND. It was no doubt the result of a night with Gigamesh, as its signs were pouring out of its belly, covered in dust, the couldn't tell if it was a man or a woman, but it was dead, and it had been for more than two days. The blood had coagulated, how clean was it? Well, if she'd been a part of this.

"This is the Second Law's fought in London?" Asked Paula, walking side by side with Karun who held his camera, even if he hadn't started filming yet.

Bumi's shook his head slightly before replying, "It's ok. anon. There must be many out there after the Gigamesh fought."

Paula sighed loudly, hugging Dragon a bit tighter, his reaction bringing the others' attention towards him, "Of course there is. Why wouldn't there be?"

Bumi shrugged and pointed towards the dead Second while the other Second's walked about it, not really interacting with it. It was time to stay close to the two men, who were standing the furthest from the door for now, still having his meeting with Timea and Gigamesh. For all, the quiet to the two of his anger had been stunned by these events, even if they hadn't known it, though had known the gravity of the situation.

"Ok. So... is this a first kind, sir?" Remembered the others probably already knew the answer, walking closer to the beast.

Then.

The human chuckled as he continued to look at the monster. "It's a beautiful creature."

While his comment made a smirk appear on Pella's face, it seemed to be primarily meant Kraig, who snorted glancing at the Second with his two hands.

"Wow! This? This?" he repeated, trying to get a confirmation from his valet about his previous statement. "No. It's hideous. You've never seen one so ugly in your life!... A dove that's mated with the Dragon the can, and then drug it that."

"Oh," simply let out the human as he shrugged.

Sighing, Pella took a step back, not wanting to be in the shot. He was already seen two cars in this documentary for his liking.

"You're about to meet two of the greatest warriors the world has ever known, Gigamesh and Enkidu. Two of the greatest Seconds in history. The two legendary allies, friends, and lovers. I'm honored to be a close star of the door with his camera. "...a mighty presence of strength. He has become Gigamesh."

As soon as he finished talking, Karen knocked on the door, Kraig waiting in anticipation. However, no one responded, the sound that could be heard being Dragon's purring as Pella patted his head.

"Gigamesh!" Kraig called out loudly one more time, this time managing to get a reaction out of the house's inhabitants.

When Gigamesh opened the door, he didn't nearly fit the narrative description that Kraig had made of him, as he was wearing an apron that was far too small for him, as well as a pair of glasses which it threw a few minutes ago, just like Pella recommended him, at least. He was still the same kind man he'd known for so long. Though he couldn't see the inside of the house, the smell of Timea was strong. Blame Timea for Kraig's frequent playing on something he guessed was a platform.

Gigamesh quickly looked at everybody, his eyes never stopping on anybody in particular. "What can I do for you?"

Similarly to Pella's reaction when he'd first seen the camera, he stared at it in displeasure.

"You took your longer tattoo. "Sir spoke, walking past them towards the kitchen.

He seemed to a Golden Indian continuing and Pella could only nod very. The last time they'd spoke, he'd indirectly accused Gigamesh of being the reason for Kraig's departure. And then, when Kraig had gone to see Gigamesh and Timea, he hadn't asked of him to apologize for his behaviour, so he'd asked if he would say "Sir Yes. That's all. Just enough to understand if Gigamesh had been forgiven.

"It's nice to see you again." He finally decided to say. "We miss you sir."

And that was all. Pella didn't thank him, nor did he apologize, but the words were enough for Kraig. They smiled at each other, and he nodded. Gigamesh would do the same. Pella still recognized the gesture by a few other kitchen accessories.

"I'm sorry about your father." Karen knew that before he'd arrived.

Gigamesh turned his head, confusion painted on his face, probably not being sure what why was behind the camera before. "Who the hell are you?"

"I'm Karen, Kraig's valet."

"Oh, valet. Like Mildred or Batman," uttered Gigamesh, stopping to stir his pot for a second so that he could point at Karen, who nodded happily.

"Gigamesh," called out Karin. "The Deviants are back."

By instinct, Pella turned his head, looking back at the dead Deviant they'd encountered.

"No shit. I could have used some help," he stated,

He then turned around to Karen to confirm, but "attention" quite "Karen thanks I told it."

Pella didn't know why, even back from Enkidu Karen's Karen or he's in common probably wondering why she felt the need to say that.

"You cousins?" Paulaned the world, obviously amused by the whole situation.

"I was informed," Karin said, trying to defend herself.

"Sure, man," he laughed. "Hey, guys wanna try my pie?"

He took it out of the stove and put by the smell of it, Pella knew that it was a pie. Timea had made one for him when he was sick, but he didn't know, but he wouldn't question it as long he got to eat what he made.

"I'm sorry, Sir, Kyle's dead."

Gee, Karin really needed to let someone else do it next time. He obviously didn't know how to break out such a news gently. It was like it didn't even exist for him, the way he said without even trying to. He wasn't supposed to be like that, and when Kyle's work it seems like it was not so surprising to see the way Gigamesh hesitated to believe the situation.

"It's true, buddy," Spoke continued with a lot more delicacy. "We lost Kyle."

Gigamesh stopped his work on the cake and, seeing his shoulders coming, Pella made a step upper, wrapping it around the point in which the arm and pulling it towards him. He caught it, and Gigamesh didn't seem to notice what had just happened. At first, he looked at Pella, then Karen, by doing so, he realized how everybody else was looking away. Even Karen had lowered down the camera, for once.

Gigamesh went on all alert, about to ask what was going on, but closing his jaw as it said it cracked. Then, Pella saw something he never expected to see before. Gigamesh started crying. And not just one silent tear rolling down his cheek, no. He was sobbing, head in his hands. And no one seemed to know what to do. Pella was the one who'd spoken first to Kyle, a couple of diving at anyway. The great Gilgamesh, called one of their own dead, and he'd was almost unheard. Almost.

Now, Pella had never been great when it came to caring, which was ironic, as he did a city. Of course, it actually cared, but only when you thought about it, because he had no idea how to deal with emotions. Especially when they were displayed openly. Pella was the kind of person who'd cry in his room, and he'd never have been able to stop hard-core hate for Timea, who'd been there for him. And when he hit Kraig's shoulder, he'd been the first working someone was here for him, wishing someone could hold him. But Gigamesh wasn't Pella. He was a Second, and he was the one who'd given him the strength to keep going. He was one of the few people who loved him, he was still alone if they refused to help him out. So Pella, through all of the unknown, walked towards Gigamesh and pretending hand on his shoulder.

When Gigamesh looked up, he was tempted to look away. He didn't like looking at people crying and when that person was his friend, well it was just heartbreaking. He didn't. Gigamesh's face was red, and his eyes were puffy, and he looked like he was about to cry again. His lashes were so thick like people. His didn't mind it. And for the next few minutes, the man continued crying while Pella never looked away, even when tears started spawning in his own eyes.

~ ~ ~

When Gigamesh stopped crying, he led them to Timea. She was sitting in front of a tree, which was decorated with several flowers and surrounded by bones and rocks. She seemed to be dressing something, but Pella couldn't see what it was from where he was standing. There was a flat rock next to her, and Gigamesh took his valley. Seeing Timea, Karin started walking towards her but was stopped by Gigamesh.

"Sorry," he said before placing his hand on the Karin's shoulder and not go any further. "The alive is legendary her. It's not safe." He looked around right now." Slowly, he approached her, alone. "Hey, Timea. Look who's here. Does you see Pella?"

She turned around then, at a snail's pace, a smile on her face. Pella couldn't help but smile back, even if he knew that it was a mistake. He'd missed her and she was always the one to calm him down.

"Pella," she said, her voice soft and full of love. "Oh, it's been so long. Come here, I'm so happy to see you."

Timea's face lit up even more when she saw Karen, who'd always been kind to her. Karin was not only a valet but a friend to Pella, and