Why are you hesitating? Let’s hurry up, I’d rather be up there than being here, gazing at solid matters, ain’t waiting even for a few seconds.

Really? Yes really, Ok take my hands then, nope! We’re walking side by side. Will you ever stop at amazing me? Maybe, I’ll leave answers to the Eternal one.

Pull! Come on, pull it, come on, try harder, these stones are too ancient, O yea, that makes it even easier pulling them off.

Watch out! Some of these rocks are disintegrating, you'd better be careful, Frankenstein, don't fall out.

I've got my feet onto it, Let's get going, I'm not falling this time.

We both climb on the sloppy rocky stones until we'd made our way through the openings above the rocky mountain.

This place doesn't look like a dragon's den to me, maybe there could be some mistake Fairest one. Edniel Yoshida makes no mistake with her words, when she says a thing, it will definitely be the truth, follow me and you'll see.

She took me through the hills and I followed her until we both came to a point closer to the misty mountain.

Afterwards, the mystery behind the mountain began imaging into my diaphragm. I saw what I wouldn't believe, if I was to be told.

Something scary and horrific has really happened here. Skeletal structure of creatures, skulls and bones were glittering all over the place.

A sword was half buried in front of the mountain.

The scenes intensely blew my mind away and I couldn't help myself, as tears began dropping like rivers of waters from my eyes.

Mourning and compassion hiss into my mind and I became gravely anxious.

See for yourself Frankenstein, this is a place where death reigns supreme, no hero has ever survive the dragons even until now.

For centuries no one has been able to avert this prophecy, this is the least of it, the "End of days" will destroy more lives. No! I will stop him, I will stop him. I screamed bitterly.

The dragons did these to them? The same thing will be done to you, Yoshida replied, at this point you either give up on your quest or choose to continue, I can't say what happens next, Yoshida declares.

If the dragons did this to them, then its better to put that dragon to sleep than to run away in cowardice without even a fight.

At this point I was determine to do anything on revenge against the dragons.

The sword in front of the misty mountain got my attention and within me, I've found the perfect tool that will aid my mission in slaying the dragons. So I went immediately and pulled out the sword, half buried to the ground in front of the misty mountain.

But something so strange did happened, after I'd pulled out the sword from the surface.

While holding unto the sword with my right hand, the sword turned reddish brown and was flaming rapidly, the fire was burning upon it so much that it smoked upwards, sending a serious message to the supreme lord eternal, Karma Kalm. Thereafter, a warrior spirit came upon me, the power of legends came upon me, the power of Gods incarnated within me, the strength of the eternal one came upon me and I was no longer what I use to be.

I couldn't figure out what was really happening to me, why is there fire on the sword, so much that it smokes upward.

I turned around to Yoshida hoping for answers from her, but instead she fell to her knees and worship me.

Yoshida spoke this words to me saying, "Mighty warrior, chosen warrior, let all your enemies fall by your sword."

After a while the fire went off, Fairest one, I called unto Yoshida, please stand to your feet, you shouldn't be kneeling down like that.

She then stood up, and said to me, Frankenstein, you've been chosen, the swords answers to you as soon as you took possession of it, and powers of legends are with you now. You're no longer what you use to be.

Fairest one, what are you talking about, I don't understand what you're saying, what just happened.?
