Chapter 101

New York. 01/11/2012. 12:00.

Nathaniel was leaving his constitutional law class and exiting the campus walking side by side with Madison that he had met a few minutes ago. Since she was leaving New York for the weekend, they had decided to pass as much time together as possible before that.

"When do you leave?" Nathaniel asked.

"Tonight, my mom is going to pick me up after my last class around 6PM and then I'm off for my older brothers birthday all weekend. I'll be back Sunday night."

"Is it going to be a huge celebration?"

"Not this time, my brother insists that it will be family only. So all my family is coming to my parents home. My older sister is coming with her boyfriend from Ohio, my uncle on my father's side is coming from Virginia the rest are living in the state so it will be easier for them. Our family always lived in the state, our roots are deep here." Madison said looking in front of her while deep in thought.

"I'm going to miss you Madie." Nathaniel said, taking her hand in his to shake her out of her thoughts with a smile on her beautiful face.

"Yeah right. Tonight you will cheat on me already with Taylor. Men are trash." She huffed playfully.

"I agree with that, you should break up with me real fast." He answered to her in the same manner.

"I will soon." She said before stopping and kissing him savagely in the middle of the street.

"I'm going to miss this." She sighed huskily once they end the kiss to breath.

"Come on, let's eat." Nathaniel said.

"Where are you taking me?" She asked.

"That french restaurant that you like on 114th street."

"The food is good there but it's seeing you talk in french to the owner that is very enticing Nath." She said, her eyes flashing.

"You are one to talk with your flawless italian accent." Nathaniel laughed.

"Well, I did go on vacation there for a month. I might as well flaunt it." She laughed back.

"If someone can flaunt, it's definitely you Madie." Nathaniel answered truthfully.

It was true, she was wearing slim black jeans, a blue top with a white blazer and looking gorgeous in it as it displayed her amazing form quite nicely for everyone to see. Nathaniel was used by now to see other men looking at her with admiring or lustful glances as he was often doing the same thing.

"Nath, we are already together, no need to compliment me even if its still pleasant to hear."

"I aim to please." Nathaniel said cheekily.

"That you do. By the way did you hear that the coach of the football team has been fired and three of our senior players expelled? For various reasons like bullying, beating and stalking. Carl was among those that had been expelled." Madison said, looking at Nathaniel with attention.

Nathaniel did know, he had been in touch with Joshua since his audition with the dean about the incident as the administration still insisted to conduct a thorough investigation about the event. He had even helped a little because he had a good relationship with Joshua and wanted to continue that way. It was always helpful to have friends in high places.

"Yes, I did hear." Nathaniel answered noncommittally.

"One of my sisters is working part time in the administration building and she heard your name being pronounced more than a couple times. Admit it Nath, you had a hand in this." Madison insisted.

"Yes, I did. I was asked by the dean to keep quiet about it but since you seem to know, I will tell you. Your friend Carl was not happy about our last encounter so he spouted a bunch of lies to protect himself and had his friend the coach help him get out of his predicament. Too bad for him, I had recorded the entire event and used it to uncover what the coach was doing. Let's just say that I have a problem with people of power using their standing to do despicable things so I followed the story through." Nathaniel shrugged making Madison who was looking at him with round eyes shake her head.

"You know, you are like a modern day knight in shining armor." She finally said, kissing him deeply in front of the restaurant.

"Yeah, now your knight will have a lot of enemies knowing that I basically ruined the chance of our school to make it to the playoff without even mentioning the members of the team who are going to want to have words with me."

"I don't think so. We sorority girls are wild but we are also loyal. All my sisters like you and every time you are in the house you are talking to us with respect and kindness, it does count for something. We will not tell everyone about this." Madison smiled brightly, dazing him for a few moments.

"Thanks for that. Let's go inside, I'm starting to get hungry." Nathaniel said before taking her hand in his and leading her inside."

Two hours later, Madison and Nathaniel were leaving each other as Madison had classes and he had an appointment that he could not miss. After a few dozens of long kisses, they had difficulty to let go of each other because it was the last time that they would meet until Monday. It was a long time until they finally had the resolve to separate with a little red faces after all the kissing.

He was walking for twenty minutes now when he finally found himself in front of the place he was looking for. It was a little pub not far from the Lyndon tower and the favorite place of the security agent of the building to cool off after a long day. In one of the booths he quickly spotted Amal and Jean waiting from him; a glass of beer in front of them. Sliding onto the opposite side of the table, he got right to the point.

"Everything went well last night?" Nathaniel asked, keeping everything that he said vague because they were in a public place.

"Yes, all happened like you said it would." Amal answered, taking a sip of his beer.

"Good, glad to hear it. Did you put the rest of the equipment where I said?"

"Yes, it is waiting for you." Jean said.

"I love it when a plan comes together." Nathaniel said with a smile, getting up and leaving the pub. The two bodyguards with their mouths still half open just looking at him.
