

Life at The Top – Chapter 1712

Jasper looked at the extremely formal agreement document in front of him. He would be lying if he said he was not excited.

Once he signed this, it meant that a transaction worth tens of billions of US Dollars was officially completed. It also meant that Jasper's JW Company would have completed its overall acquisition plan for Nokia.

This acquisition plan involving a total of more than 25 billion US Dollars was the largest acquisition of overseas assets by a domestic private enterprise in Somerland. Moreover, this acquisition was an acquisition of assets as a whole. It was not some gimmick project of later generations that would increase the number of funds by several tens just to campaign and promote a bunch of empty shells.

After exhaling deeply, Jasper picked up the pen.

At this moment, Jodaville came up to snatch the contract like he had gone crazy.

However, on such an occasion, how could he be allowed to mess around as he pleased?

The moment he got up, Reynoldson quickly held him down, and then, with Dalvira's acquiescence, several security guards forcibly came over and pressed Jodaville against the chair, immobilizing him.

“Jasper, I will never forgive you!”

“If you dare to sign it, I will do everything possible to kill you!”

Jodaville was pushed against the chair as he yelled frantically and threatened Jasper.

Jasper did not even look at him. He even pretended like he did not hear what Jodaville had just said. With a wave of his hand, he signed his name on the document.

After watching the signing of the contract, the people present at the scene all had mixed feelings.

Reynoldson was excited and thrilled. After paying such huge risks and costs, he had finally succeeded. He recalled how dismissive he was of this man from Somerland when they had first met.

Now, Jasper had proved his ability and put his money where his mouth was.

Reynoldson exhaled deeply. He was glad that he had made the right choice.

As the director general of the National Social Security Fund, Dalvira also breathed a sigh of relief.

This kind of feeling was like an ordinary person committing a crime for the first time. Before acting, they were uneasy and anxious, but after it had become fact, they felt relieved.

He knew that he had become a sinner in the eyes of Finland, but it did not matter. Soon he would resign and then take his family and children to flee far away with the generous remuneration package. Finland and Nokia would not have anything to do with him anymore.

The most emotional person was Jodaville. He was like a deflated ball as he sat dispiritedly on the chair. Suddenly, he burst into tears. It was unknown if he was upset because he would be kicked out of Nokia or because this national brand was going to become history for the Finns.

“Thank you, Mr. Jodaville.”

After Jasper signed the document and exchanged it with Dalvira, they shook hands and smiled at each other.

Dalvira grinned and said, “No need to thank me. At the end of the day, the world belongs to the strong, and Mr. Laine, you’re one of them.”

“However...”

With a sigh, Dalvira looked at Jodaville, who was wailing pitifully, and continued, “If possible, please give Jodaville a good ending. Among the many people in the room, he’s the only one who loves Nokia and this country.”
