

A Lifetime Love chapter 11

Chapter 11

Seraphina hesitated for a while and finally said, "Mom, Dad." Although her voice was not loud, Guillaume, Constance, and Lucien could hear her clearly. "Yes, my dear." Seeing how things had turned out, Constance had no choice but to accept Seraphina. Well, at least she's pretty. Looking at her gorgeous appearance, I do feel less resentful. Meanwhile, Guillaume gave Seraphina a slight nod. Whether he was willing to acknowledge her or not, she had greeted him, after all, so he responded out of respect. Moreover, even if the Hoult family had fallen, they used to have a close relationship. There was no need to make things awkward. Moments later, Guillaume and Constance took out the wedding gift they had prepared beforehand. Of course, a prestigious family like the Riviere family would be lavish in their expenditure. Constance took out a black card and stuffed it into Seraphina's hand. "This card is a little something from us." Hearing that, Seraphina cast a brief look at Lucien, and the latter shot her a glance, indicating that she should accept it. Hence, she did not refuse and nodded. "Thank you." "Have a seat." In actuality, Guillaume and Constance did not have any prejudice against Seraphina. It was just that the incident happened too suddenly. They had attended the wedding between the Salisbury family and the Hoult family empty-handed, but when they returned home, they suddenly had a daughter-in-law. Kidnapping the Salisbury family's daughter-in-law was indeed pretty unacceptable, not to mention the perpetrator was their precious son, Lucien. Seraphina nodded and sat on the opposite couch in a dignified and elegant posture. Lucien scrutinized her from head to toe and realized that she did not look like a girl in her early twenties. On the contrary, she looked rational and mature, and a person of that age should not be that level-headed. "Lucien has told us everything about you and him. This happened too suddenly, so my wife and I weren't mentally prepared for it. But since we've acknowledged you as our daughter-in-law, we'll treat you well. Besides, our families are old acquaintances. We'll hold the wedding ceremony in the near future. Constance and I only have a son. Our only hope is for both of you to live in peace and harmony." Guillaume was a sensible man. After all, he was a prominent figure and had experienced all kinds of situations before. In fact, it was normal for him to give himself airs, but he did not. After all, the more powerful the man, the more humble and polite he is. His words had shown how much he respected Seraphina and the Hoult family. Listening to that, Seraphina let out a sigh of relief. She thought that her in-laws were pretty easy to get along with. "Dad, there's no need to hold a wedding. I always think that marriage is between two people. This incident has already caused a commotion. I don't want our families to be in the spotlight, so I think it's better to keep a low profile. We'll discuss the wedding if there's a chance for that in the future." Lucien was a little surprised, as he did not expect Seraphina to be so assertive. As a matter of fact, he was pretty satisfied with her idea because he was not a flamboyant person like Denver. Even though both of them were the heir of a wealthy family, Denver was ostentatious while Lucien was humble. Denver enjoyed being in the news headlines. On the contrary, Lucien committed himself to work and only played basketball or did things he liked occasionally. Hearing Seraphina's words, Guillaume and Constance exchanged glances. "All right, then. We'll do as you say." After having a short chat in the living room, Seraphina and Lucien went upstairs to rest. As soon as they entered the bedroom, she handed the black card to him. "What are you doing?" He fixated his eyes on her, and a smile crept on his face.
