

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 814

The members of the Fletcher family always kept a low profile in public. For instance, Stanley was already the president of a listed gaming company, but he stayed low-key and never revealed his family background. And even though Maddie was married to the man who was once the youngest major general of Cethos, she never mentioned a word about it to the public; she preferred to just be known as an intern at the newspaper company.

"It's not easy for girls from other places to find a job in Bayside City now. I risked my life to write a few reports about the earthquake that attracted attention. Because of this experience, the editor-in-chief agreed to give me an internship. Moreover, I've already given birth to a child so they don't have to worry that I'll take maternity leave and waste the position. Because of these two reasons, I managed to defeat the elite students who competed at the same time."

Maddie was a very talkative person. While leading Sophia to her office, she chatted endlessly.

Before this, Sophia always thought that Maddie got the job because of Joel's connections!

Maddie's desk was tucked away in a corner of the spacious office. It was a small desk and it was filled with materials. As Maddie talked about her desk, she looked really proud. "My seat is the best in the company. The pantry is on the left and the printing room is on the right, so it's really convenient. Take a seat, the editor-in-chief is still in a meeting. Wait for a moment while I bring you a cup of coffee. It's freshly ground coffee with the coffee beans I secretly brought from home."

With a smile, Sophia replied, "Go ahead and do your work. I'll go meet the editor-in-chief myself later."

After sitting in the office for a few minutes, Sophia found out why Maddie's desk was right between the pantry and the printing room. Maddie had just sat down for a few minutes and switched on her computer, but before she could click on a file, the office was filled with voices calling her name.

“Maddie, get me a cup of coffee.”

“Maddie, the materials I need are already in your mailbox. Please help me print them.”

“Maddie, I’ve sent my materials to the printer. Once they are printed, send it over.”

“This seat is not only close to the pantry and the printing room, but it’s also close to the washroom. It’s considered to be the best seat in the whole office!” Maddie was so content and optimistic that Sophia was speechless.

She was a girl from another state with low academic qualifications and didn’t have any powerful background. Because of luck, she was unhurt in the earthquake while other local reporters who were at the scene were either dead or injured. Reporters from other states were not allowed to enter the disaster area, so Maddie had exclusive coverage which she showed to the editor-in-chief. Because of this, she got to enter a company with elites with great academic backgrounds. Naturally, Maddie would be under pressure.

She hadn’t stopped since she entered her office. Wearing a pair of canvas shoes and a shirt, Maddie carried a cup of coffee and a stack of materials as she hurriedly shuttled among a group of well-dressed employees.

After she finally finished delivering the coffee and materials, an old woman with glasses came over and fiercely threw a pile of materials on her table. Then, she asked rudely, “Maddie, have you prepared the materials that I asked for this morning?”

Hearing this, Maddie hit her head and replied, “Oops! Sorry Miss Buckley, I forgot. I’ll do it right now.”

Miss Buckley muttered in dissatisfaction, “Hicks are hicks. People like you are not ambitious and do nothing in the office. A lazy person like you will never be a permanent employee even if they gave you a lifetime to prove yourself.”

Maddie was scolded so fiercely that she didn’t dare to say a word.

After Miss Buckley left, Maddie immediately turned on her computer and started working. Ever since she came back to the office, she had been running around the pantry and printing room so she didn't have time to prepare the materials.

Seeing her being oppressed, Sophia couldn't help but speak up. "Why do you choose to suffer? Ask Joel to use his connections and he'll help you find an easier job. Joel is in charge of the military training in Bayside University so no graduate from Bayside University would dare to disrespect him! He'll be able to find you an easy job effortlessly."

Unexpectedly, Maddie was unbothered. "Suffer? I'm not suffering! Look at how good my life is. There is no mortgage pressure and there's someone taking care of my child. I don't have any pressure at all. My life is great!"

Compared to the other country girls who lived in basements and struggled with unemployment, Maddie was considered a very lucky girl. She was married to a man from a powerful family who could protect her and she didn't have any mortgage or car loan to worry about. Moreover, there was someone who took care of her child so she had no worries at all. All she had to do was to work hard. It would be perfect if I can become a permanent employee with a good salary and get a foothold in the workplace.

Sophia could see content on Maddie's face. This was the greatest difference between her and Irene. Irene would never be satisfied with what she had and she was extremely greedy and ambitious. Meanwhile, Maddie was already really happy with what she had. Even though she was bullied and suppressed by a group of colleagues, she was still very happy and carefree.

She really is a silly girl...

While working on the documents, Maddie said, "I'm already having a really happy life right now. I don't have to worry about my child at all and I'm only earning some money for myself. Back then, I almost died in the disaster area but Joel flew down from the sky, lifted the prefabricated plate and fished me out of the rubble. Being married to him is the greatest thing that has ever happened to me!"

Looking at Maddie's blushing cheeks, Sophia thought that she looked like a little girl in love and couldn't help but tease her. However, before she spoke, Maddie's colleague who was sitting nearby already started giving bitter remarks.

"Why are you so happy to be married to a paratrooper?! Can't you be a little more ambitious?!"

Maddie shrugged helplessly and muttered to herself, "To be able to marry Joel brings me great happiness. I want nothing else."

Sophia shook her head and smiled. I heard Joel is already promoted to lieutenant general...

The colleague closest to Maddie suddenly remembered something and asked loudly, "Maddie, you went out this morning. Didn't you say that you were going to do an 'earth-shattering interview' in the Messenger group? How did it go?"

Speaking of the 'earth-shattering interview', Maddie was filled with confidence and replied, "Don't worry, I've promised the editor-in-chief that if it's not earth-shattering, I'll leave the company."

Everyone in the office laughed, but their laughter was filled with ridicule. What kind of a big shot can Maddie, a shabby girl from the countryside, interview? An earth-shattering interview? What a joke!

Everyone naturally didn't believe her and was sure that she would be kicked out by the company tomorrow.

While they were chatting, Miss Buckley who was talking to Maddie a while ago came over. "Maddie, the editor-in-chief is looking for you."

Maddie thought that the editor-in-chief had finished his meeting so she said "Sophia, I think the editor-in-chief is done with his meeting. Come, I'll introduce you to him."

Hearing this, Sophia hurriedly grabbed her bag and followed her. She thought to herself, I should give Maddie a hand because she's really hard working. She stayed calm during the earthquake, has written many reports and taken many photos, some of which she won awards for. Her work ability and resume makes it completely eligible for her to be a permanent employee. However, she is looked down upon because of her education background. I came here to put an advertisement in the paper and I'm the client. I can probably give them a little extra money and give some hints to the editor-in-chief to secretly make her a permanent employee...

Unexpectedly, Sophia met a person that she really did not want to meet.
