

MEDICAL GOD CHAPTER 454

With her face ghastly pale, Lin Yueyao refused to stop her CPR on the patient. Alas, it didn't seem to be working.

As her eyes began to redden, she could feel the anxiety start to swell within her chest.

This wasn't just about the consequences she would face if he didn't make it. It was also because as a doctor, she refused to let a life slip through her fingers like that.

A director by the side snorted derisively, "Dr. Lin, where were you when he needed you? You should have sent him here to the dental hospital long ago. And look what's happened now. I'm telling you, we haven't even touched this patient. All the responsibilities lie with you guys."

In the world of medicine, dentistry was an independent entity like Western medicine and TCM. Thus, the dental hospital existed solely for the purpose of attending to dental needs.

Back when the patient was with Lin Yueyao, he had complained of an aching neck and chest pains. But for some reason, the nurse who diagnosed him sent him to internal medicine for a check-up first.

After a thorough examination carried out by Lin Yueyao, she realized that the root cause was the necrosis of a certain nerve in his oral cavity. It was the cause of his aching neck and chest pains.

Now that she had found the root cause, all that was left to do was to administer the medical assistance.

However, this was a job for the dental department. She had already explained clearly to the patient that all he needed to do was to go to the dental hospital next door for a diagnosis.

However, the moment she completed her check-up, the patient immediately began convulsing and crying out in pain. Thus, Lin Yueyao immediately got to work.

The patient then took out some medication from his pocket and told Lin Yueyao that was what he always took when he was in pain.

Seeing how badly he was convulsing and afraid that he would bite his own tongue, Lin Yueyao hastily fed him one of the pills. After all, judging from the look of it, it should have been just a simple painkiller without any side effects.

However, right after she administered the medication, the patient fell unconscious and briefly went into shock.

Only then did Lin Yueyao realize that he was in trouble. She then hastily contacted the dentists from the next door hospital and sent him over.

But alas, they were too late. Although the dental hospital was able to fix the nerve beneath his teeth, they were certainly not capable of helping the patient recover from his shock.

And the internal medicine doctors like Lin Yueyao were unable to resuscitate him through the standard procedures.

This was all due to the fact that the root cause in his oral cavity hadn't been addressed. Thus, he was unable to come around.

Afterwards, when the family members arrived and learned that the doctors were at a loss for what to do, they immediately started making a scene. Lin Yueyao even got slapped across the face during the commotion.

There was even a bright red handprint that was still on her face. However, this didn't really bother her. After all, there were mistakes on her part throughout this entire incident. The most important thing to do now was to resuscitate the patient.

"Director Zhong, you can't pin all the blame on me. The patient went unconscious whilst in my consultation room. I was naturally obligated to rescue him."

Director Zhong sneered, "Yes, you did nothing wrong by trying to rescue him. But do you have any idea what medication you fed him?"

"He was the one who insisted on eating it!" Lin Yueyao protested.

Director Zhong was unfazed. "Dr. Lin, you are the doctor. He is the patient. Are you supposed to be the one listening to him when it comes to what medication should be taken?"

Lin Yueyao gnashed her teeth together as she didn't have a response for that. In that situation, any doctor with the slightest conscience would have done what she did. Who would have been thinking about the responsibility to be shouldered at a time like that?

"Director Zhong, I sent the patient here in time. Why didn't you guys do anything?"

Director Zhong shook his head. "I'm afraid that's where you're wrong, Dr. Lin. You sent the patient to us after he went into shock. We are a dental clinic after all. I can solve any problems residing in that oral cavity of his. But now as you can see, the patient can't even open his mouth. We have our hands tied."
