

MEDICAL GOD CHAPTER 652

Everyone became quiet after listening to the woman's words.

Dr. Yan was especially quiet and deep in thought.

It was after all, his patient and she was not completely healed. After three years, there was a relapse!

Then, Dr. Yan had said that this sickness would be completely healed once the medication was finished. Unfortunately, after three years, under such circumstances, he met the same patient again.

Qin Jun nodded his head and said, "According to the symptoms you mentioned, it is indeed a stroke. The diagnosis made by Doctor Yan is correct. Based on the symptoms of your sweating, we can conclude that you have a stroke and Clear Positive signs."

"There are two phrases in the Clear Positive literature."

"The Pueraria lobata is the medicinal plant for headaches and Guizhi is the traditional formula for cold sweat and stroke."

"You have been obese for so many years, sweating for a long time and so, you must have the syndrome of Yang deficiency. Therefore, the prescription of Pueraria lobata and Guizhi prescribed by Doctor Yan is the right medicine and will not go wrong."

Qin Jun had started with explaining basic TCM knowledge. His words were very professional and all three veterans nodded and agreed with Qin Jun's words.

Doctor Yan's gaze especially showed his approval because when he treated the illness, he did indeed follow the same line of thought.

Qin Jun spoke, "Let me check your pulse."

He held the woman's wrist and checked her pulse whilst asking questions.

"Do you have a tummy ache? Does your tummy feel bloated after a meal?"

The woman said, "Sometimes it hurts and the stomach is distended after a meal. I pass out gas often too."

Qin Jun asked again, "Do you urinate a lot?"

"Yes."

After a few minutes, Qin Jun let go of her wrist and spoke, "In the Book of Feverish Illnesses, the 'Sun Section' speaks about fever, sweating, gas, slow pulse, named 'stroke.' There are many types of strokes and the type you suffer from is 'bad gas' which is a result of stroke and hard to deal with."

"An unsteady pulse, abdominal distension, dry mouth, sweating during sleep, and incessant urination are all typical symptoms of 'bad gas.'"

"The prescription, Pueraria lobata and Guizhi can only heal these symptoms for a while. After some time, the symptoms will resurface, sooner or later."

"According to the Three Yang Sutra, there has to be some Licen for longevity.' Go back and get the prescription prescribed by Doctor Yan, and add the same dosage of Licen as Pueraria lobata. After that you will be cured."

The woman got up and bowed in gratitude.

“Thank you, Dr. Qin...”

She also turned around and thanked Dr. Yan.

Dr. Yan’s reaction was tinged with embarrassment as he smiled in reply to the woman’s words of gratitude.

Although this illness could not be cured on the spot, the three veterans could find no fault with the diagnosis and the prescription.

Since Dr. Yan had not totally cured the illness, it was obvious that the condition was no simple challenge.

Furthermore, before Qin Jun checked the woman’s pulse, he had already judged Dr. Yan’s diagnosis and prescription correctly. This took a lot of skill to postulate correctly.

Following that, Qin Jun had mentioned the line from the Book of Feverish Illnesses which described the symptoms correctly.

Everyone had read the Book of Feverish Illnesses but they did not recall this line because they had been careless when checking the pulse. The fact that Qin Jun recalled the line showed that he was highly skilled and his technique of checking the pulse was superior.

As for the subsequent alteration to the old prescription to add one more medical ingredient, this was understandable. Once the ailment was diagnosed correctly, giving the right prescription was quite straightforward.

Qin Jun's prescription addressed the illness perfectly, without fault.

The overall conclusion for this case was that Qin Jun had diagnosed the illness perfectly and prescribed the medication faultlessly.
