Chapter 99 An Amusing News With a grin

Silas said, "You're most welcome. They chose to cooperate with your magazine publisher simply because they think there's potential in helping them to generate more sales, which is basically a win-win collaboration for both, so don't mention it."

Hearing that, Kate was so touched and even had the sudden urge to sell off Camila. "Thank you for all that you've done. In the future, if there's anything that requires our help, please don't hesitate to ask. Camila is very capable! She's nice and has such a pleasant personality. It's simply a great blessing to be friends with her!" Picking up a fishball, Camila threw it into Kate's bowl. "Eat up!" she ordered, hinting her to keep her mouth shut. "Exactly, you've gotta keep a low profile. Don't go overboard" ridiculed Landon. Picking up another prawn ball, Camila dumped it into Landon's bowl and warned, "Shut up and eat up too!" These two just wouldn't quit embarrassing me... With the corner of his mouth curved up, Silas really enjoyed the free and unrestrained atmosphere. "I'm lucky to be the one to receive such a blessing," he chimed in. Putting on a smile, Camila said, "Then I guess all of you have to treat me better. Otherwise, I'll take back all the blessings!" Being nomophobic, Kate was browsing on her phone when all of a sudden, she burst out laughing while taking a peek at Silas. "What are you laughing at?" Landon asked. "Take a look at this." Kate passed her phone to Landon, and he laughed like a drain too. Glaring at them, Camila complained, "Why are you two laughing among yourselves? Sharing is caring!" "Two naked men were tied by the Jordan Bridge and were seen freezing in the cold throughout the night. Oh my, I'm about to die laughing!" Landon guffawed as he wiped the tears off his eyes. Laughing along, Kate joked, "Aren't they afraid that it will cause an accident? Since the drivers will be busy checking them out instead of paying attention on the road." Rolling her eyes at them, Camila said, "What's so funny about that?". Throughout the conversation, Silas didn't utter a word. He was busy eating, as though the news mentioned had got nothing to do with him. When the dinner was coming to an end, everyone was a little tipsy.

Both Landon and Kate couldn't hold their drink. After drinking a couple of rounds, both of them had reached their limits. If Silas hadn't been around, they would've probably been having a live concert and singing their hearts out already. Silas was better at handling alcohol, but he gradually felt a little tipsy too. If compared with Camila, he was no match at all. Noticing the light flashed on his cell phone, Silas knew Xavier had arrived. Getting up from his seat, he said, "It's late, so I'll make a move now. Drop me a call if there's anything." "Alright," Camila replied politely and didn't stop him from leaving. Trying to stay sober, Landon and Kate got up to send Silas off and, later, took their leave too. Upon sending them off, Camila ushered South the sleepyhead into his room and got out to clean up the table.

After spending an hour clearing up the whole mess, Camila went into her room. While browsing on her phone, she read the news which Kate had mentioned about the two men.

It was a 10 seconds video, and the image quality was rather clear. At first sight, Camila could recognize that it was the exact two men who came to her house with Robin-the men with bad intentions. If she didn't know it was the both of them, she would have thought there was nothing amusing about this news. Somehow, she had a gut feeling that it was Silas's doings. Initially, when Silas handed Robin over to Aleena today as a warning, she was puzzled for a moment because she didn't see the other two men with him. Quelle surprise! They were on the bridge. Silas did not spare anyone. Camila couldn't find words to describe her current feelings. After returning here for some time, he did have some misconceptions about her character, but putting that aside, he seemed to be helping her all the time—from solving the kid's fighting issues to yesterday night's ceremony, as well as defending her from Robin. She knew very well that his intention was to repay the kindness, all because she had saved his grandpa. Hence, he made every effort to help her. Frankly speaking, she was really touched by all he had done.

Chapter 100 Does Silas Like You?

The next day, Camila took South to the studio with her. On the way, they were stuck in traffic. The car had been in a complete standstill since forever, and honking sounds could be heard everywhere. There were cars that got in each other's way, as well as cars that were supposed to move but were stationed instead, a bustling scene to behold. All of a sudden, Camila's cell phone rang. Putting on the Bluetooth earphone on her ear, Kate's voice sounded from the call. "Camila, did I say anything embarrassing yesterday?"

"I don't think so," said Camila.

"It was my first time having dinner with such a reputable person, so I was kind of nervous," Kate confessed.

"Nervous? Isn't he human like you? With two eyes and a mouth!"

"That's not what I meant. The moment he sat down, I had difficulty breathing. I really don't understand how you interact with him. That reminds me! I wanted to ask you since yesterday—does Silas like you?" Hearing that, Camila's heart skipped a beat. "Quit your nonsense! He has countless girls running after him, so why would he like me?"

Sitting in the back, South had heard what Camila said, and he felt joy bubbled up inside of him. I guess I wasn't the only one who thought that Daddy likes Mommy!

"Can you explain why he helped us, then? And what about the house? If he doesn't like you, why would he do so much for you?" questioned Kate. Anxious, Camila explained, "What else? He just happened to be around us when that incident occurred. Isn't it normal for a friend to help out? And about the house, he said it was to pay me for my consultation. I had been to the Nolan Residence several times, and he had never paid me a single cent. Do you think it's that easy to seek for my consultation?"

"Fine! You're good, and I simply cannot win against your silver tongue. Wanna bet?"

"Are you that bored?" "Chicken! Crash-! Before Camila could reply, a car just cut in line in front of her, and she didn't manage to brake in time, hence her car crashed into the car.

With that, Camila noticed the car had just turned on its blinker. Slapping her forehead, Camila said, "I'll talk to you later. Something popped up."

Upon hanging up the call, she saw a man and a woman getting out of the car before her.

The woman was wearing a black skin-tight dress with a beige woolen overcoat. Knocking rudely on Camila's side window, she shouted, "Get down this instant! Can't you see our car just now? Did you deliberately crash into us?" Frowning, Camila wasn't pleased at all. Frankly, the damage on the car didn't bother her much, for most importantly was that no one was badly hurt. Besides, considering it was such a close distance, there were probably just a few scratches on the car. By right, they should've turned on their blinkers if they had wished to cut in line. However, Camila figured she shouldn't have talked on the phone too, so she had to share the blame. Anyhow, it would be fair to just take matters into their own hands, but this woman was acting plain rude. Getting out of her car, Camila checked on the condition and realized there were indeed scratches on the left side of the front car bumper. The car in front of her was a Mercedes-Benz, and it seemed to have received much more damage as the passenger door was dented. The man didn't say anything but was seen touching on the spot that was badly damaged. Refusing to back down, the woman jeered, "We just bought this car, and look at what you've done." Dumbfounded, Camila argued, "Well, my car is new too, and it was scratched. Besides, your car cut in line and didn't even turn on the blinkers. Why are you acting like it was all my fault?" Behaving like a shrew, the woman pointed at the flashing blinkers and bellowed, "Are you blind? Can't you see that the blinker is still on? You're the one who was on the phone while driving! Don't you know that it's against the law?" Extending a stop gesture, Camila said, "Alright, let's not argue. It's not worth our time. Let's call for the police and let them determine whether I had violated the law."
