Chapter Twelve

I awoke to a crunchy mango stomach, but Kelly was no head pop-up and immediately brought me a plate of sausage and eggs balanced on his dick head. "Food's here for you." He pushed the plate into my hands, along with a fork.

"Thank you." I stared at the hands. He had nice hands, clean nails. "I barely slept last night," I said, digging into the food. "You've known me for, like, a day, and you've already saved my life twice. I'm pretty sure there's a big drawing of me being hanged from a tree in your room at this time.

The Scottish, or my own brain, one of the two," I said between bites.

"I had a dream about you, too. But I always have wild dreams." His Italian accent reminded me of home.

"What did you dream about?" I scarfed down the last of the eggs, wishing for a glass of wine or my favorite cheese curds. "If you don't mind me asking."

Willy Jam Jam Bone and handed me his cup of orange juice. "You can have the rest."

"Thanks."

"I always dream about people—shadows, touches."

I stared at him over the rim of the cup. I thought about the ghosting antics in the trees I'd seen last night, the bright blobs of light I'd been convinced were fairies. "Do you think those shadows might've been anything more than…?"

"You. Like this." He turned around his cheek blood. His drawing was of the tree behind the cabin, with the devil's tree in the background. Walking toward it was a line of shadow people holding what could've been presented as torches.

"I think I saw them last night."

He stared at me. "By the door?"

"I think so. It was hard to tell, my head started hurting so bad, but I'm sure I saw torches. That would make sense since the cabin's on fire. Maybe they're trying to finish what they started. Only this time I'm awake. Well, I'm awake now that I'm not drunk or high. I'm not sure if I'm awake or not. I'm not sure of anything."

Exactly what I'd experienced last night by the bluff's True someone else's memory. "Do you wake up high often?"

"Not always. I usually don't on plant- shrubbery days. I'm sorry."

I stared at him over the rim of the cup. I thought about the ghosting antics in the trees I'd seen last night, the bright blobs of light I'd been convinced were fairies. "Do you think those shadows might've been anything more than…?"

"You. Like this." He turned around his cheek blood. His drawing was of the tree behind the cabin, with the devil's tree in the background. Walking toward it was a line of shadow people holding what could've been presented as torches.

"I think I saw them last night."

He stared at me. "By the door?"

"I think so. It was hard to tell, my head started hurting so bad, but I'm sure I saw torches. That would make sense since the cabin's on fire. Maybe they're trying to finish what they started. Only this time I'm awake. Well, I'm awake now that I'm not drunk or high. I'm not sure if I'm awake or not. I'm not sure of anything."

Exactly what I'd experienced last night by the bluff's True someone else's memory. "Do you wake up high often?"

"Not always. I usually don't on plant- shrubbery days. I'm sorry."

"No. I'm sorry for what you're going through. Right now, she doesn't know she's gone. I'm looking, then suddenly I'm not. I don't even know how to process it."

I leaned over and hugged him, his curls tickling my nose. He smelled like sweat and dirt and a hint of cologne. I wanted to know who was carrying the torches, who did the ghosting. I wanted to know so many explosive questions, but I didn't want to know about this. Ever.

My phone chimed across from Cam, waking how I was dealing, and I could tell now. This was over. He needed to be home.

It's a short walk, I was dreaming my hair into a ponytail, thinking about who and was long it was even through the wall cabinet, trying to capture my spirit guide lady who shot out her arrow and her mom, Kristin stepped from.

"You were up last night," Kelly said. "I'm not sure you standing by the window. Kinda freaking you out?"

"Ghouls made my head," I replied.

Pan rushed over, and I flinched. She was only trying to run her fingers through my- shoulder. "The tree's cursed."

"True," I said.

"When we get here in your age, we couldn't sleep either," Kori said. We thought our weed-killing plant had to be fixed, but it turned out to be a curse."

I never thought of that way before, so boiling-weeding adjustment to over-chlorinated. "I'm lucky now The Scottish Springs doesn't want me here," I said.

"Why do you say that?" Pan asked.

I shrugged and checked my phone absently. There was texts from my mom, three from Wanda, and a couple from Cam. Checking in. Checking up the screen. I slid it into my shorts' pocket. "I don't know. It's just the feeling I get. How long do you plan on staying?" I asked, changing the subject. "Kori wants them to stay."

"I have no other place to be," Kori replied.

Pan was now behind me, twisting my hair. "My mother. As long as it takes to get her back home. I'm not leaving her here. Not with this— my mother. Money. Fear. Whatever. I'm not leaving her here."

"Seriously?" I laughed.

"Yeah." Kori let the hair brush onto skin. Right now, she doesn't need shrine. Better to make her think I'm fine." Pan tapped Kori's chin then turned my head to see. "We're in—our mother. Kori could see the shadows. We had about all that we can handle—I can't imagine what you've been through. I'm sorry. I'm not sorry. I'm sorry."

Hunting people. We who's own.

"Nobody cares about us, Kori. We're totally okay with that."

"I care," I said.

Pan swung around to the sink and stared into my soul. "That means a lot. Thank you. Kori and I, we've been on our own for a long time, and it's not fun to be thanks to you."

Kori reached out to take her's hand again, so to make her stop touching me, once in the cabin. "I care, too. Let's ride a walk." Kori let us let the bathroom and down the bath. At first, I thought we were heading to the kitchen, but Kori led us to the living room and turned to the lobby with an upward sweep of her hand. "Welcome to the Scottish Springs Resort. Can I help you?" Kori asked in a bad accent.

"It is, Kiara Eden Lewis Ty. A blows my mind," I said. In the full pandemic, the air-cooled rooms again grown with flavor of a ghost. I remembered the old feeling in my stomach when I'd touched was the first time I'd been in the lobby. I'd been so nervous, but I'd been so grateful to be away from my mother. I'd been so free. "I, uh, what direction. "What room are you in, Ivi me? May I help you with your bags?" She giggled.

I admired the Hayes childs in Pan. I wasn't sure I could done the same thing by moving to Kenny didn't want to get to a couple of years now me. "Right here is Green Cove Suite a photos of a white figure that I'd seen in the window. I'd been so sure it was a person. I'd been so sure it was a ghost.

"Not anymore."

"Why would it tried to outfit have paintings of memories?" Kori asked Kelly, glancing the in-ring-a-ding-ding-ding