Chapter 371

With the road extension, Lily was gradually fascinated by the scenery on both sides.

There were lavender flower fields with a sea of purple flowers.

The season was already ending, so the flowers were almost gone. The rest were still in the process of being harvested.

There was an elegant floral fragrance floating in the air, which was refreshing. "Greenfields," she raised her head and let the wind mixed with the fragrance of flowers follow her, feeling the beauty bestowed by this nature.

"Actually, this season isn't very suitable for viewing flowers. However, besides flowers, there are other good things as well. I think you'd be interested," Alexander said while driving. Lily looked at him and smiled, "The most famous thing here is lavender. From June every year, the flower farmers start to pick flowers and then distill the extract to make various aromatherapy, essential oils, perfumes, soaps, and so on. Isn't this what you wanted to show me?"

"You guessed it all, so what's the fun?" He looked at her with a smile, looked forward intently, and increased the speed a little. He piqued her interest, creating an atmosphere where she could unwind and feel much more physically and mentally at ease.

She let him take her for a ride without further inquiry.

After passing through the large flower fields and paths, they came to a vibrant town.

Although there were many tall buildings there, it also retained some medieval styles.

All kinds of people were on the street, shuffling between the markets, either in a rush or just casually walking.

With the crowd interweaving together, they formed a unique landscape.

The lavender fragrance was floating in the air, and it made people feel very soothed.

After he parked the car, Alexander took her hand and walked along a charming street without hassle.

There were no bodyguards around and no hiding from others. Here, no one knew them.

They were just an ordinary little couple. Lily liked this feeling very much. It was casual and relaxed, without any burden. "You drove me all the way here to escape from going home and go shopping instead?"

Lily laughed at him.

Of course, she still liked it very much.

"Of course not."

Before he finished speaking, he pulled her around a corner and turned into a store. It was a very specially decorated shop.

There was not much different from the outside, but when stepping inside, there were all kinds of delicate objects.

Most of the accessories and ornaments in the store were brown and green, and the shades of the colors will be different, but the overall tone is very consistent. It looked very comfortable and had a unique sense of style.

"It's fascinating here!" She turned her head to speak to Alexander and probably glanced inside for a bit.

"Can you see what's special here?" He asked with a smile.

There were not many people in the store. Customers were shopping while talking softly and occasionally making a few crisp laughs.

Lily paced unhurriedly and saw a heart on the shelf.

The carving was very delicate and looked very similar.

The heart was light brown, not red. She stood in front of the heart, leaned forward slightly, and took a deep breath.

There was a very faint aroma mixed with the smell of food.

Lily narrowed her eyes and wanted to reach for it but was stopped by a voice, "Hello, please don't touch it!"

The other party spoke in the Westwood language, so she answered, "I'm sorry, I just think it's beautiful."

Well, if she was not allowed to touch it, then don't touch it!
