Chapter 372

With such a close distance, along with her own aroma, she had pretty high confidence.

"You speak the Westwood language?"

Alexander was shocked because he did not know about this.

"A little bit," she smiled.

She did not think it was something worth sharing.

In contrast, the store they were at was much more worth discussing.

"It's fascinating here."

Alexander did not ask any further questions because she obviously did not want to discuss the matter of being able to speak the language.

He continued her topic, "Then take a guess, what's the material for this?"

The clerk beside him was about to speak, but Alexander stopped him with his eyes. Seeing him full of confidence, as if he was sure she could not guess the material, Lily was a little amused,

"Southbank soap. Did you think I couldn't answer?"

Alexander kept quiet.

The smile on his face condensed for a moment. He probably did not expect her to answer accurately in one go, "You've seen this before?"

"I haven't seen it, but it was a guess based on the routes you took me to. It's one of the characteristics of this place. The most famous thing in Greenfields is lavender, and a related industry chain has been derived because of this special flower. Southbank soap is quite special," she paused and then continued,

"Southbank soap is mainly made of olive oil, which is why it has this color. Its scent is also extraordinary, unlike other soaps."

"Then, you know," he was silent for a while, then spoke slowly.

However, there is a bit of resentment in this sentence, as if it was carefully prepared for her, but it did not achieve the expected surprise. It was the first time Lily to see his expression like this.

It was funny and heart-warming.

No matter what, he is also very kind!

"I just know, but I haven't seen it," she said, as she took his arm and leaned against him, "I had seen the introduction of Southbank soap when I was looking for information before, which is why it's normal for me to be able to guess. It's my first time seeing it, especially this special shape. It's unique!"

She did not say that just to comfort him. It was the first time she had seen such an ingenious way of making Southbank soap into various trinkets and handicrafts.

The ornaments and pendants there were all carved from Southbank soap.

Although it is soap, the decorations were very detailed and similar.

For example, it was fascinating to have a pen holder and a toy bear with vivid eyes, which she liked at first glance.

However, touching it will affect its appearance because of the unique material.

It was also possible that the temperature on your hands would cause the soap to melt slightly, so no one was allowed to touch it.

After careful observation, many corners were actually written in different languages to prohibit touching.

Lily was too happy just now and did not see it.

"Southbank soap is not uncommon in this area, but this one is attentive. This shop is different from other places and insists on being hand-made,"

Alexander picked up a piece and told her.

"Hey..."

Before the clerk beside him could stop it,

Alexander already had it in his hand, and

Lily hurriedly said to the clerk, "Let's buy it."

He then turned his head to look at

Alexander and said disapprovingly,

"Everyone has said that it is forbidden to touch!"

Alexander said with a smile, "Didn't you just say it? Let's buy it!"

"Sure..."

"Mir.Russell, I've been waiting for you for a long time!"

A person pushed in from the outside, went straight to Alexander, and stretched out his hands enthusiastically.
