"How is it?" Seeing that he did not move, someone impatiently asked aloud.

The perfumer looked at Lily in confusion and then lowered his head to sniff the scent on the test strip again. He did not answer— instead, he dipped a tissue in clean water, then used it to wipe the tip of his nose. After that, he quickly picked up the other bottle, repeating the same action.

His reaction intrigued everyone else, and the crowd curiously stretched their necks to see what was going on. Once he put down the test strip again, he looked at Lily. His expression was surprised. "How did you make this?"

"Continuous trial and error," Lily replied.

"Impossible! I've tried many times, but it didn't work. You said you only prepared these two bottles when you returned to Brown City, which is even more impossible!" He stared at the two bottles in disbelief.

"If I rush back to Brown City to start the experiment, it is impossible. However, that's not the case. I've tried many times before, so I know the formula, ingredients, and amounts by heart. I just needed the company to prepare the materials and allow my assistant to mix them according to my formula. That's why I made these relatively quickly."
