Seeing his confused and irritated look, Margaret said, "Tell me about it then. What was she doing at the time, and what were you doing? What did the two of you talk about? I'll analyze the situation and see if you did or said anything wrong to make her unhappy."

Margaret's words shocked Ralph, who shifted slightly to the side and looked at his mother in disbelief.

"Mom! You're kidding me, aren't you? You want to analyze the situation for me? How would you know what's in her head? She's so much younger than you are!"

"What? Are you calling me an old woman?"

Displeased, Margaret threw him a sidelong glance and asked.

"No, no, no! That's not what I meant. I just wanted to say that you might not be able to guess what she is thinking."

"That's hard to say."

Margaret seemed confident.

"You don't understand this. We're both women, and I'd understand her better than you, you silly boy. Come on, are you going to tell me? I'm leaving if you're not going to say anything. By then, you can think about it yourself!"
