

Never Late, Never Away Chapter 807

Even though the little girl wasn't particularly pretty, she was extremely adorable.

She was staring unblinkingly through the window of a shop, as though there was something she greatly cherished inside.

Vivian's curiosity was piqued as she wondered what exactly deserved the girl's unwavering attention.

Hence, she shot Finnick a glance, signaling for him to follow her forward, to which he nodded and complied.

Upon walking closer, her eyes widened in surprise as it was not what she expected at all.

The little girl was staring at a very beautiful wedding gown.

The gown did not have many extravagant decorations. It was just an uncomplicated design with simple color, but it looked pure and modest in a very alluring way.

Hence, it wasn't all that strange that the little girl was fascinated by it.

When Vivian was young, she, too, had fantasized about wearing a beautiful wedding gown to walk down the aisle and marry the man she loved.

Looking at the look of awe on the girl's face, she had the urge to ask her why she liked this wedding gown.

So, she crouched down and peered at the girl with a gentle gaze before vocalizing her curiosity.

But the girl's answer came as a massive shock to her.

"My family is poor, so my mommy said no one will marry me when I grow up, so I've come here to look at this wedding dress.

"It's really beautiful, but I feel sad that I won't have the chance to wear it in the future. That's why I want to look at it now so that I won't have too many regrets in the future."

After she finished speaking, tears pooled in her eyes, but she quickly blinked them away.

Vivian's heart squeezed in her chest when she saw the girl trying so hard not to cry.

"It's okay, sweetie, don't cry. Every girl will get the chance to wear their dream wedding dress and marry their Prince Charming."

Vivian wanted to comfort the little girl, but her brows furrowed slightly as she sensed something off.

After a moment, she realized where the problem lay. She never had a wedding, let alone wearing a wedding gown.

Vivian didn't know how to comfort the girl anymore because it would only be a lie if she did.

She didn't wish to lie to such a cute little girl, so she could only swallow back the words at the tip of her tongue.

"Okay. Then I'll study hard and wear a wedding dress when I grow up." After listening to what Vivian said, the girl suddenly broke into a brilliant smile and promised to study hard.

With that, she turned around and left, leaving Vivian in a daze.

Just a single sentence managed to make her so happy?

Kids nowadays are really easy to coax.

Finnick fell into deep thought after witnessing this scene.

"C'mon." Vivian slipped her hand into Finnick's and continued walking forward.

They reached home after walking for a little longer. Vivian was exhausted from an entire day of activity, but she went to check on Larry in his bedroom first. Seeing that he was still awake and playing with his toys, she told him to come downstairs to have some fruits.

She wanted to create more opportunities for Finnick and Larry to spend more time with each other. Only then could Larry fit into his new home sooner.

Of course, Finnick understood the reason behind Vivian's efforts.

Hence, he tried his best to play the role of a father. Even though he didn't have any experience, zero was where many things started.

Nothing's impossible as long as we work hard for it.

With that thought in mind, Finnick put things in motion.

"Larry, look what I bought for you." Finnick brought over a Doraemon jigsaw puzzle and placed it in front of his son.

Previously when Vivian showed Larry to his Doraemon-themed room, Finnick noticed how happy the latter was. Hence, he took note of it and bought something Doraemon-related for him as well.

But this jigsaw puzzle required two people to complete it. This could provide the father and son more bonding time and improve Larry's intelligence at the same time.

Finnick studied Larry's face to gauge his reaction.

"Thank you, Daddy. I love it!" Larry genuinely liked this gift.

Finnick ruffled Larry's hair with a fond smile and said, "As long as you like it."

With that, he started to piece the puzzle with Larry.

Larry was a smart child. Even Finnick would have taken some time to complete the puzzle alone, but under his guidance, Larry successfully pieced the puzzle together very quickly.

Brimming with fatherly pride, Finnick picked Larry up and spun him around, causing the little boy to giggle happily.

He had always wanted to be swung around by his father when he was younger. Thus, he was over the moon when his wish finally came true.

Vivian's lips curled into a content smile as she watched the interaction between the father and son.

This was undoubtedly the best scenario a family could hope for. As for having a daughter, that would have to wait until a few more years into the future.

Of course, Vivian wished for more beautiful moments such as this for her family, but rather than risk shattering the moment, it was better to exercise caution instead of rushing things.

After all, one wrong move could very well disrupt the harmony in this family.

Vivian smiled in relief as she observed her two favorite boys dancing around with equally bright grins.

She was confident that no one could come in between her family when they had such a strong bond.

Night fell soon.

Vivian lay in bed and stared blankly at the ceiling.

Finnick, on the other hand, had his arms wrapped around her, immersed in his thoughts.

“Vivian, do you think that little girl from earlier will have the chance to wear her dream wedding dress in the future?”

Vivian was perplexed by his question, but she still answered him seriously, “I don’t know about the wedding dress, but I’m sure it won’t be like what her mother said about no one wanting to marry her.”

Vivian disapproved of certain parenting styles that affected a child negatively. No matter how poor a family is, they should never destroy a little girl’s dreams like that.

What’s wrong with telling a few white lies if it means making your child happy?

Parents should, at the very least, protect their children’s feelings.

Finnick hummed in response but remained otherwise silent. He had only asked it as a casual question, but after hearing Vivian’s answer, he was even more certain about his decision.

The two of them fell asleep in each other’s arms that night.

The next morning, Vivian was bewildered when she woke up alone on the bed.

After washing up, she went downstairs to look for Finnick, but he was nowhere in sight and neither could she reach him on his phone.

She was baffled because usually, he would inform her before leaving the house.

And even if he wasn’t home, he would keep his phone turned on twenty-four-seven and answer whenever she called. What’s going on today?

Where did he go this early in the morning?

Puzzled, Vivian went to Larry’s bedroom and found that he was still asleep.

Left without a choice, she could only sit on the sofa and wait, thinking that he would be back for breakfast.

Unfortunately, she thought wrong – it was still radio silence on Finnick’s end when breakfast time arrived.

When Larry came downstairs after washing up, Vivian sighed and started breakfast without her husband.

But later on, she noticed another problem – Noah was missing as well.

Hence, she had no choice but to personally send Larry to school that morning.

Because it had been a long time since Vivian drove him to school, Larry was in seventh heaven when he got to know this.

Yay, Mommy's finally sending me to school today!

Vivian smiled when she sensed Larry's excitement and urged him to quickly finish his meal to avoid being late.

In good spirits, Larry happily obeyed.

Vivian was still pondering where Finnick could have gone to, but after a long time, she was no closer to figuring it out.

It was soon time for Larry to go to school.

Vivian chose a low-profile car from the garage. After getting Larry settled, she put the car in drive and set off.

As Vivian wondered what Finnick was doing, the latter was scratching his head over where he should place the flower in his hands.

It turned out that he felt he owed it to Vivian to give her an unforgettable wedding.

Thus, he wanted to go through the normal procedure, which meant proposing to Vivian.

Finnick heard that women liked getting proposed to in public, so he set the location of the proposal in the largest park in the city.

First of all, parks generally gave people a warm and pleasant feeling, so he believed that it was suitable for a proposal. Secondly, there would also be a larger audience.
