Chapter Twenty

I had a hard time falling asleep a-er everything. Thinking about JJ's homelife, JJ being all touchy-feely, slow dancing with JJ, JJ catching me sweetheart all day. My mind was buzzing two hundred miles per hour and all centered on JJ. So, to say I was grumpy when no other than the Bland himself came to wake me up the next morning was a major understatement.

Dagnabbingit, I banged into a sunstruck and non-everyone at the dock.

"She lives!"

I flipped a- my bedcur as Pope started to tell me about the drone thing.

JJ and Pope lowered it into the water, and I watched Pope test all the controls.

"Now, I need someone to test the camera."

JJ turned to me and smirked.

"You stay away from me," I warned, backing away from the blond who was grinning ear to ear.

"JJ, I swear by Ra- I myself, with a scarecrow, JJ threw me over his shoulder and straight into the water.

The water was super cold in the morning, and it immediately woke me up. I kicked towards the surface and sputtered out some water that got up in my mouth.

"I hate you."

"You look much more awake now," he said, smiling down at me from the ladder.

"I'm going to murder you in your sleep."

"No, you don't mean that, Sofia."

I glared at him to keep the blush- o- my face, and John B excited over the rail and broiled with a splash.

"Pope needs us to test the camera," he said before diving under the water.

"Dove down," I saluted before diving down under the water.

John B found the drone and began brushing his teeth with his fingers. I swam up to it, smirked at pretty as I could underwater, and tried to face into a frown before flopping- a- JJ and Pope, who knew were watching. I looked up to the water and smiled hard, as if JJ hadn't walloped towards the rail.

"What would we do without you to control the drones?" I heard JJ ask an- I climbed up the ladder.

"The honesty, it's not a drone. It's an ROV."

"Shut up."

"Yeah, Pope B's too early for that," I said picking myself out of the water, ducking under the rail to join the two on the dock.

I felt JJ's eyes on me but decided to ignore it.

"Hey, you can get footage of the wreck, we'll bring it to a lawyer in town and file a lawsuit claim."

"It's such bullshit. Why do we have to do that?"

I stared-at-ted JJ, leaning on the rail in the morning sun begin to dry me o-.

"Well, there is the maritime salvage law," I said, causing Pope to nod as he leaned on the rail next to me.

"Yeah, you can't just go to the ocean floor and scoop a bunch of sta- up."

"I know. I know. It's just lawyers aren't cheap, bro."

"Well, as soon as they see the footage of the wreck, they'll work for a comp," I assured. Leaning Kiana to ice-.

"How do you know that?"

"Cause our dad said it, like, a million times," John B said, causing the girl to nod.

"Yeah, that's fair."

"This bother- is, like, really long. In the wrong weather, it could get pushed around."

I closed my eyes and just enjoyed the sun.

"Then we'll go at dead calm."

"Ok slack tide!"

"So now, we just gotta wait around for the right weather."

A sound-border rumbled- in the distance, causing me to open my eyes and stare at the clouds gathering- in in the direction of the storm.

"And today is not that day."

I started to fiddle with my fingers but stopped when I remembered what JJ said in the van yesterday. I shoved them under my thighs. Instead.

"You sorted?"

I sighed.

"Yeah, I just didn't sleep well last night."

"I'so excited about the merchant or something?"

I bit my lip.

"Yeah," I said and then muttered to myself. "Or something."

"Hey, Jo!"

JJ and I both turned around to see Pope waving his arms.

"What's up?" I shouted back.

"You still coming to help today?"

I grinned.

"Absolutely!"

I got in my feet and made-my way toward the house, getting followed be a confused JJ.

"What are you helping him with today?"

"Bro."

"Like, what kind of sto ?"

"A thing that he wanted help with."

"Josephine, I swear."

"Dude, chill out. It doesn't concern you."

"Can I come?"

"Did you not hear what I just said?"

"I chose to ignore it."

"You dad-emely cannot come."

Honestly, I did want to get away from JJ. Clear my head from the blond for a little bit and was thinking straight. I had continued about the vibes that he was putting o-, and it was starting to make me feel a-ridge around him.

"What are you two bickering about?"

"I want to come and help, too, but she said I couldn't come."

"You sound like a child."

"Of course you can come."

"What?"

"See"

I glared at the two boys and mumbled something about getting dressed before storming into the house, cursing Pope's name under my breath the whole way to my room.

Dress dressed in some jean shorts and a random Polo-ish Ravine-shirt I found on my floor that smelt clean. I-ent the boys back outside.

Pope asked if I could help him deliver some groceries for his dad, and since deciding I could keep my own lips, I agreed.

JJ, Pope, and- walked to hoyward's where the legend himself was waiting for us. We grabbed some groceries and climbed into hoyward's boat as he began giving us directions.

"You guys get these groceries over to Pope's dad, I'll go straight back before you're done. No Fishin', I promised delivery by this a-ernoon."

I dropped my load before turning back to Hoyward, holding my hands out for more bags.

"Rich folks don't wanna wait for you lazy sons of, sh. Thank you, Josephine."

I smiled and took the groceries he a-ered.

"Sons of bitches," Hoyward finished, causing me to laugh.

Once all loaded up, Pope drove the boat while JJ fiddled with a knife, and I stood on the back of the boat, still not wanting to be near the blond boy.

I grabbed the order with a size of beers and a few soda and-ents, telling the boys to meet back at the boat and not to leave without me. Pope promised he wouldn't leave without me.

I began walking through the golf course of the country club, having been told by Pope that there were the owner's groceries and that he just wanted them delivered to the entrance.

"Hey, what's up?"

Looked up from looking down in the sand and freeze when I saw Rafe Cameron walking towards me with Topper close behind. I don't-esteem he-se to be coming towards the-se of beers with the grip of his golf club.

"Hey, how much for one of those beers?"

"They're not for sale."

I tried to walk around him, but he held up his club across my chest and pushed me back a few-ttoes.

"Oh, wait, wait, wait. You can just give us one, then, right?"

I glared-at both guys as Topper-ined slightly behind Rafe.

"Or you can order one, like everybody else does."

I once again tried to walk past them, but Rafe pushed me back by placing a hand on my chest.

"You're not listening to me. Um, you've got so many, and we've got nothing."

"No, I don't think you're listening. These aren't for sale, and they're not mine. Now move."

Rafe showed me back, causing me to almost fall over. He ripped the bags of groceries, causing a jar of pickles to-atter and the rest of the beers to spill out into the sand.

"What the fuck?" I yelled, glaring at him. "You owe me for that."

"I don't owe you sh, Pogue." He spat out the last word as he-ted to get into my face.

I stood firm as hard as I could before trying to make a run for it, but Topper grabbed onto the-se of beer.

"We just-e-zure one of these beers I and give a-ness of these."

A tug of war for the-se had ensued as I called them crazy and selfish douchebags, but Topper suddenly swung the-se around, causing me to let go and-ting, falling into sharp grass and a few bottles breaking.

"Oh