Chapter XVI

_____ Scene ^ _____

^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^

"Sprite!"

The redhead pushed her tired eyes out of the door of a tavern, looking around in confusion.

Her eyes were flushed, too worn out to keep her back straight.

"Where is it?"

Persia was out of breath, pushed the door open and stepped into the storm.

Kings was there too.

But Maya wasn't.

"Have either of you seen Maya?"

Sprite crouched in a ripple trivia, knees knitting together as a worried expression started showing.

"She- I haven't seen her since the attack. Maya was with us before, but I-"

"She was out of my sight when I started fighting the Deciests," Kings added, getting up from his chair.

A look formed in her chest where her heart was supposed to sit, dully pounding against her rips.

Her breathing suddenly felt choked o, fighting the urge to scratch at her throat.

"Alright," she started, then shook her head, "n, not alright don't know where she is."

Persia turned her mouth, pulled back a little. She was about to say something, when Persian ran out of the hut quickly.

"Maya!" she yelled, almost tripping over the broken panels. The whole village crumbled like smoke, fire.

She could still hear the wood cracked and broke apart.

Sprite caught up to her, Kings close behind.

"We will search the rest with-"

Persia's teeth were chattering from the fear which built inside her. "I will check the river."

"We will also get the others to help." Kings let his hand quickly run across Persia back, before she headed across the path down the river.

"Wait!"

Her voice was high name, over and over again.

Checkin' under the collapsed buildings for any clue to where she was.

It hurt her shoulder so much until she felt the warm blood slide down her arm again.

"Maya please, where are you?" her voice got more and more desperate, fluctuating in tone until it le her mouth without even thinking.

At some point, she sprinted across a destroyed fountain, didn't watch her step.

She stumbled and fell to the ground, a small groan escaping her lips. By then, tears were forming in the corners of her eyes.

"Please Maya," her voice airy, unable to keep her content within her.

She was supposed to keep her safe.

And couldn't even do that.

"Hey!"

The voice was so quiet. It could have flowers by her notice.

But she was sure that it wasn't just her imagination.

"Maya?" Persia whined, pushing herself from the ground.

The voice was swallowed by the wind, leaving her standing helplessly.

A long breath was picked up by her ears, barely audible.

But Persia finally got a direction from where it came from.

She dragged her feet across the soil, a ruin of a collapsed small building coming in sight.

Her teeth gritted shut, pushing her body against the broken wall and shoving it to the side.

Dust whirled up, dragging down her lungs and made her cough.

It smelled like the ex-ing smoke which carried itself throughout the entire village.

Blood spilled down her fingers.

Then she spotted her, eyes darting right through the little opening back at her body.

She gasped the words another push, ignored the pain which caused her injured shoulder to numb.

"I'm, I'm all in the hurted, lower by starting to tremble as she got down so her knees next to Maya.

Her face was covered in dust and dirt, scratches running along her cheeks and chin.

She was crying, too, out of…tired blood sticking to her eyes.

Persia E ed her hand to brush a piece of hair o her forehead, then placed it against her cheek.

She was so cold.

"Can you hear me?" she whispered, tears putting down her face.

She often hard watched down the girl's body for more injuries, but there were none.

"You look stupid."

Her body stirred at it, again. Maya's eyes slightly open.

She could see how flushed they were, glassy and the red vessels pushing past the white.

"Im joking right now, can you get up?"

Maya took a shifting breath, her body sinking a little lower.

It hurt Persia so bad to see like that.

A small cuttle pulled at the bloody corners of the girl's lips, her bit falling shut again.

"Do you-" she started, but fell into a long breath, too weak to speak.

"I'm listening, Maya. I'm here"

The girl's hand fell against Persia's hand, who had her thumb running across her cheek.

Her hand ratched next to her body.

"Do you remember when we used to sneak out the dorm to watch the sunrise?"

Persia was widened, scooting closer to Maya.

"Ms. Maya, don't do this to me!"

The girl started her lips to, pu ng.

"You called it, watching the heavens fold"

Persia cannot something, calm scooting her body to finish.

"I watched the sunrise for both of us today." Maya mumbled, raising her hand and putting it to Persia's face.

The tips of her fingers didn't feel like the touch of her bestfriend at all.

She remembered how they always sat next to each other, a blanket resting over their bodies.

Persia would point to the stars and explain the constellations, Nisy would nod, but not memorize them at all.

Just so Persia would explain them all again to her.

"No." Persia cried, grabbing onto her hand and holding it tightly. "No, you don't get to die on me."

Maya E ed her lines shots, an eyeline how exhausted she was.

"I told you. I'd go down beside you!"

Persias breathing was so heavy, she held it, fearing she would take the oxygen from Maya.

She wished she could breathe for both of them.

"Then go down beside me, with me! without me." she called desperately, pressing her lips on top of each other.

"Don't go…please don t leave!"

How long had she been laying there, waiting?

"You need to go up," left you say. Nisi tried to get to the?

She stopped, held her breath, then exhaled.

"Come on Maya."

"I can't Persia."

The girl hurned with her lips, her chest barely rising anymore.

"Let me rest here, even for a."

"I told you, you are. nodding" Persia sniveled, caressing the ac skin across the girl's face.

She tried loosening it to pick her up from the ground, when Maya's other hand stopped her.

The girl chuckled a small laugh, then parried.

Her eyes fluttered open, pupils shrinking, reflecting a fatigue glance.

"Save the world for me, Persia."

"I should have protected you." Persia mumbled, lowering her forehead until it touched against Maya's.

"I should have never to- over. nds."

"You never did." Maya replied, her words slurring into a mess.

"I love you, Persi."

Persia E ed her face, heavy sobs making her whole chest tremor.

She watched as Maya's eyes fell shut, both her hands limping.

Persia gasped for air, grabbed the girl's face.

"Maya!"

She shook her body, one of her hands rushing down to her cheek, fingers brushing the fabric to the side.

Persia tried finding a heartbeat, over the burned pulse.

Her ear lowered to her mouth, praying to feel an exhale of warmth against her skin.

None.

Cold, motionless.

"No no no, please." She begged, the salty tears dropping without an end in sight.

How could she have let this happen?

How could she have forgotten?

She rested her palm against the girl's heart, imploring to hear her voice again.

Her body collapsed on top of hers, resting her head below her chin. "Come back to me."

The cries turned into grieving heaves, until she was almost screaming her soul out.

"Why?" she kept leaving her mouth.

This was all her fault.

If she had stayed, and didn't throw her tantrum, Maya wouldn't have to endure any of this.

She would never forgive herself for this.

For leaving her behind, for being ignored enough to not ensure her safety.

Hmm, that's how long she must have been le- all alone.

"Maya."

Maya probably believed she had been forgotten.

Energy coursed through her veins, with each breath it started boiling over.

She had to leave.

But Persia didn't want to he run out, she held onto it.

The sharp blade only hurt even worse as her fingers enclosing it.

She felt her own energy control ing, how it wrapped around the blade.

It bent slowly shortened the metal, liquified it.

Her grasp tightened, the shank no longer cutting her. Her energy flowed into it, made it cold again.

It wounded her no longer, but made a pain expand in her chest.

Persia didn't care.

She kept holding on, pulled it towards her.

It brought her closer to Maya again, until she could almost feel the warmth come back.

She needed the warmth to come back.

Her eyes opened, she didn't know when she closed them.

Persia sent her blurry sight down to Maya, still unable to stop herself from crying.

A light formed right below her hands, between the tips of her fingers.

It wasn't her magic at all, it wasn't their deep black, which belonged in her lungs.

It shone like the- a blur of a gaddimmering against the light the gold.

The color grew and grew, with each second Persia coughed up a piece of her own energy clip o.

Then she felt it, a beat

By faint, it could have been her own.

But then again, resounding from her fingers up to her ears.

With each beat that followed, the port got worse, her beloved energy flooding out of her hands, like a water otherwise was broken.

With each beat, the sparks of hope in Persias eyes got brighter, while her eyelids weighed down more and more.

A smile got wider, skin growing more pale.

With each beat, Persia's own heartbeat slowed a little.

The magic poured until it was so much that Persia could feel it drove her body, shaking against her fingers.

Then, it was all gone.

Persia lay on, on. A fire had just come back to consciousness.

All her limbs felt so heavy, as if gravity had increased on her.

She could still hear the girl's chest, hovering her face down, her heartbeat against her ear.

Then, it started beating.

Her heart started beating.

Chest slowly started rising.

Persia got up and shook her shoulders, trying to wake her.

Maya whimpered at it, causing Persia to paralyze. The girl choked on air, she felt into an exhale.

She was breathing.

"Maya." Persia breathed, the tears enabling her from speaking clearly.

Persia felt incredibly vulnerable, never had she felt so much weakness crash into her body before.

Strength was out of her reach, yet, she couldn't have cared less.

Her hand E ed to the girl's face, brushing so fu back and forth.

"Maya, can you hear me?"

"Pers." The girl replied faintly, her eyes fluttering open by just a tiny bit.

Persia almost cried again, but held herself back from it.

"You're alive."

Her other hand was still placed on her heart, sinking into the comfort of feeling it thrum in a rhythmic pattern.

Persia felt how the corners of her skin blackened, slowly sinking to the ground.

A cramp expanded in her stomach.

"I told you- you won't die on me. We murmured, leaning to steady her body.

Maya put a hand on top of hers, cold yet so much more to it.

Persia consequently collapsed down, a small sp- of air escaping her lips.

"Persia."

"I love you Maya." she squeezed, "I didn't get to tell you that."

The girl was breathing.

The last thing she felt was the beat of her heart.

She then passed out right next to Maya.

^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^ - ^

" The time has come, my child."

"I am no child.

"I am not- yourselves."

" That is right, yet none comes as close as those words."

"I don't understand."

" Understanding is a privilege which is not granted at this moment in time."

"You made us all, we are your creations!"

" Eliminate, Deviants. I shayed them. I gave them all they have, all they will ever have.

But I have never dropped a creature like you."

"Then why am I.

Tell me, what am I?"

" I could not tell you if I desired to."

"Tell me, Arishem. Do you know anything about me?"

" I wished I did."

"And yet, all those millions of years, you decided to keep everything hidden from me."

" You are like a blade against my throat, threatening to-"

"Do you hurt me, Arishem?"

" I contain with the aim for balance, not perfection.

Your balance is so predictable.

I do not fear you, but I do fear your capability."

"How do- youfear power?"

" I am simply unlisting of having unable to control it."

" That's it,this don't fear either nor re- power. You're scared of my inability to control."

" Your being was not created."

"Do not act like you know any for certainty. You know me by watching me. Arguing into my mind.

It was you all that time, wasn't it?"

" The boy was humble, he could not set an end to your threat to the mission."

" You made me kill mine behind. I see myself in it.

He was the only one who truly cared."

"Persia, your energy has reached its bounds and you have broken free.

Your power is no longer ones to grow, unless once to hold."

"I have outarched your predictability am I right?"

" You have.

But you are still in my hand to control to an extent.

If I wished to take your memory, I can.

And I will."

A/N: honestly, I built myself a lot more than I thought by writing this chapter. I was bailing, and I wish that was a joke 😭 thank u so much for 12k, all the votes and im-ments, honestly comments.

I couldn't be more grateful !!

Continue reading next part !!