Liam finally laughed, "V, even if I kill myself, I won't kill you."

He put it so sincerely it made Ivy feel even more uneasy, what if he really found out about that huge secret, what was she going to do?

She was worried just thinking about it.

Liam realized that she was not talking. He was worried that he had played the joke too far. He softened his tone, "Enough, I'm not going to scare you anymore. How are you? Have you eaten? Did you miss me?"

"Yes, I've eaten, yet I've missed you," Ivy said, "what about you? How did you know about Yanne's secret?"

"She told us."

"She told you? How is that possible?"

"Hmm, maybe because she started having a guilty conscience about not being pregnant. Maybe she thought it true that she did not need to waste her effort on a scumbag like me, so she told US everything.

Until Siena noticed him by the door and yelled at him, "Daddy!"

Then only Ivy came to her senses and looked at the door.

Seeing Liam standing by the door, she was first delighted, then slowly stunned, she got up and said, "Why are you here? Didn't we say that you don't need to come?"

"I miss you all, so I came," Liam said with a smile, standing by the door. "What? Do you not welcome me?"

"Of course, we do!" Siena had already put her pencil down and rushed to Liam. "Daddy, we missed you!"

Liam opened his arms wide and picked her up. He ruffled her head and asked, "Were you a good girl obeying Mommy?"
