Ivy was speechless.

She raised her hand once more and hit him on his back. "Liam, how dare you tricked me!"

"You just have a dirty mind."

"I don't."

Liam pointed at the dining table with his chin. "Go and eat a little. I have just sliced some apples. Don't starve."

"I don't want to eat." Ivy hugged his waist tightly. "I want to accompany you while cooking."

"But I can't cook with you hugging me."

"Then, just do it slower."

"What if I spoil the dish?"

"Even if you spoil it, I'll love it."

"I slept last night." He smiled.

"Did you even sleep for three hours?"

"When the sleep quality is good, three hours is more than enough forme."

Ivy was speechless.

He had taken a whole day of flight. Once he arrived, he had made love to her until three or four in the morning before getting up at seven to make breakfast and send Siena to school, yet he claimed he was not tired.

Forcing him back into the house, she said, "No, if you die of exhaustion, I can't bear the responsibility. Go and sleep."

"Okay, then you come with me." He hugged her around the waist and demanded.

"I just woke up. How am I going to accompany you."

Also, she was afraid that if he were to accompany him, he was not going to sleep again but instead do something else.

Liam said, "Just let me hug you to sleep. I will fall asleep very quickly."

Are you sure that you will fall asleep and not do something else?"

"I won't," Liam said with a smile, "I might be able to take it, but I'm afraid that you won't be able to."
