Sixteen - Close Quarters

The pain didn't leave once the others and the smoking man had left. It was there when they came back and it was there when they left. It was there when Scully was taken away and it was there when Mulder was left alone. It was there when he was sitting in the dark, waiting for the pain to subside. It was there when he finally got up and left the room, and it was there when he got in the car and drove away.

It was there when he was driving to the house on the bay. He was driving on autopilot, his mind a million miles away. He was thinking about Scully, about the way she looked at him when she was in pain, about the way she looked at him when she was not in pain. There was a long silence between them.

"I'm sorry," he said finally.

"For what?" she asked.

"For everything," he said. "For not being there for you. For not protecting you. For not being the partner you deserve."

"You're not responsible for what happened to me," she said. "You're not responsible for what happened to Samantha. You're not responsible for what happened to anyone."

"I'm responsible for what happened to you," he said. "I'm responsible for what happened to Samantha. I'm responsible for what happened to anyone."

"You're not," she said. "You're not responsible for what happened to me.