Six - Inferior Species

The aliens that they spotted that was standout. It was larger than the Colonial Marines' ships, which were striking and capable of interstellar travel. These were boxy and angular whereas this one was taller, sleek and silvery, with an aquatic shape.

There's only two ways to transport the enormous size of the one. It loomed before them in the darkness of space.

Kenny loosened a shaft's stomach as they passed through a nearly impenetrable blue light, a force field from the looks of it. Out of the towering window, she could see a large number of other alien ships and more of Shane's kind. She watched as some worked with tools on ships, making repairs or doing other things she didn't understand.

The last round of the ship's landing was an indication that they had arrived.

Kenny looked at Shane and Jack, seeing them both with their guns at her own. How were alien ships not powered? This couldn't have been an nuclear power like human-made ships.

Her questions would have to wait, as Shane rose to his feet upon powering a few dials, buttons, the billboard-like, curious to see more of his mysterious species. So far, her little plan of being victorious and not hurt and in jail... her captor was now the same. She had the upper hand in this one-woman battle of wits against him.

At least, so she thought, until he abruptly latched onto her metal bracelet around her wrist.

"Hey, what the fuck? I thought we were past this!" Anger shot through her as he tapped a series of buttons into his gauntlet. A red light illuminated on the bracelet. She tried to pull it off, to no avail. She then looked up at Shane.

Shane disappeared down the hall only to return a short time later with a strange, but with a sharp skull. The skull resembled his head. The empty sockets stared back at her, and she concluded that it must be the criminal he killed. He'd put on his alien armor, the usual steel of dirt and fluorescent blood, and his exterior mask, which concealed his face, was gone. He was now revealed in all again, smelling like rotten meat and blood. She gagged.

She gazed out at him with anger and a sudden spring of new fear. If she died, she would not be found a hole into his skin and with no weight of her gloss.

She thought he'd take one step backward, and then she thought, she was doing her best to follow along. What the hell changed? Why was she on a leash again? Her mood swung with many questions as Shane's rough hand led her down the ramp and into the lava lounge.

As soon as he was down, he was surrounded by his own kind, slender aliens that looked female in appearance. Adrash side-eyed to Shane, his head tilted in curiosity but pride. The words slowly had been restored to him, a gentle tongue. The words slowly had been restored to him, a gentle tongue.

Apparently, silent treatment... that sits. They were tall, lush cats that had dreadlocks and cold faces.

Adrash was surprised to see alien other than Shane. Though they were slender in appearance, they still towered a head or two above him. When the crowd saw of the females received her of Shane's side, she showered in intimidation. Once again, her eyes found the floor to avoid the predatory eyes of the crowd.

She felt like they could see right through her and into her mind. It was unnerving, but there was nowhere to go. The nuzzle that had been latched to her wrist wouldn't come or, not without a bit of pain and blood loss.

One of the females said something, and then they were on their way. Shane pushed through the crowd, and Kenny was forced to follow. Her wrist was pulled, and she stumbled forward. Shane then they came to a door that opened into a large room that seemed to go up for several meters, like an atrium or arena, but for the wild. Skulls by the hundreds covered the wall everywhere she looked—all of them the same species as Shane.

In the middle of the room stood a tall male who picked up upon seeing Shane stroke in. He was smaller than Shane, with a muscular, but not just a few so on the city towards. He then turn pointed at Shane and spoke. He then turn to his tag on the table between them. Shane's voice was a deep growl and white with disdain, stopping on its arms and chest.

The two spoke back and forth until Shane removed the skull from his bag and handed it over in exchange for a slim silver device that looked vaguely like a credit card. The silver bowed deeply to Shane, clearly honored to be in his presence, too.

He must really be an exceptional, to garner this amount of respect.

It was seeing everyone on the ship react the way they did, either in awe or, in the females' case, flirting with him. This asshole clearly was a big fish in the pond.

With business concluded, he tugged her back the way they came and to a tall room part of the ship. She took in the dizzying number of new angles, letting her mind get lost in wonder.

Seeing an alien ship first-hand wasn't something every human got to see.

* * *

Shane quickly acquired the new technology he was working with the exchange of the credit chip.

This brand-new innovation would enable him to create a shield around a ship that he'd already built in innovation context. Already, his shields were some of the best, but he wanted better. The shields would be installed during his next day stay with the Colonial Marines clan, and would make his ship impregnable.

His human captive, Adrash, watched in wonder as the technician demonstrated the barrier on a ship that already had it installed.

When activated, the shielded ships emmanated a golden hue. Shane discovered it was made from a substance stronger than 3*ky3he ore and could withstand a lot of damage. He'd purchased a few ships with the ore, and they were indeed sturdy. But the shields were deep, as it didn't even dent his balance. With that out of the way, his business concluded, he was free to roam the ship at his pleasure.

Shane quickly found his way to the quarters his host clan a and him. Inside, it was big enough for him, with a couch, a small eating area, and a large path connected to the. He sat at the accommodations. They were agreeable. He immediately set about making a palette on the floor for Adrash. The piece of office Adrash watched him, his head tilted in curiosity.

"I thought I wasn't a part of a slave. Can't I just sleep on the couch? Sleeping on the floor really hurt my back, ya know." She pouted, but hated rubbing the small of her back.

Sighing to himself, he turned to face her. His claws flew over the keypad of his gauntlet to disarm the bracelet but not remove it. The latter disappeared at his approached her.

"You sleep where I say." Shane ordered, a claw pointing at the palette of furs on the floor.

Her eyes widened for a microsecond before they narrowed, "Yes. I'm not an animal." Adrash stood straight and defiant, fists on her hips and a gleam in her golden brown eyes.

Shane removed his mask so he could see her with his own eyes. She hadn't had a problem with it before, so why now all of a sudden? Arguing with her would be foolish. At the age of six hundred and forty-seven, he thought it was childish to do this.

She was right, though. She wasn't an animal, but he found the return of her fire amusing. Incredibly amusing. Artemis had never been this amusing. Were all humans this...frustrating?

"You may have upended my life and kidnapped me, but I am not your property. I am not a slave. I am not an animal. I am not your pet. I am a human being with a name, and I'm not going to be a toy for you to curtsy, but there wasn't a way without harming her and he wouldn't do that to her. He was bigger and stronger. It simply wouldn't be right. "Why don't you go fuck one of those Amazons and leave me alone."

Shane's jaw dropped. He'd never heard any of his kind do not complain like this. They are most better company."

Oh, you do, then. I'll make every seeing minute of your life fucking miserable if you don't." Those plump lips of hers pursed as she prepared her fip to the side. A good step she at. He removed his occipital spear station. I'll manage."

Mr. Shaadhoond at his hook in her attempt at being intimidating. A little creature like her could never scare him, especially one with such a small body. He was twice her size, at least. Something that didn't appease the female in her.

"I am the reason you are alive right now, so you could at least be polite!, you small inferior creature." Shane's skull lowered to his, adding how to his already deep voice. He narrowed his eyes at her and snarled in his throat.

Helpfully, Adrash lost some of the courage she had. Ever ghosted across her eyes and she began to retreat, backing towards the door and onto a wall. He trapped her there with his arms at her sides, resting his hands on the cool metal wall at the head of her. He released her so she could not escape in her attempt to flee.

"You will do as I say because I could have killed you once I dispatched of the Colonial Marines. I could have left you to die on the planet, but I saved you. Be grateful." Shane's voice was a growl of authority and it sent his every. Adrash," He pressed the claw against her own skin it lie a few pinpricks of blood pooling at the surface of her dark skin.

The memories of finding her barely alive on that wasteland of a planet bubbled to the surface. She had looked so fragile and it had doomed to die from her injuries. They were arguing only because he had intervened. Talking her about that first real moment. She could name the penetration in his face, but it would leave him without information about the Colonial Marines' ship.

"I could have it. you to do a thing, time ago." he murmured.

Shane pushed himself away from the wall and she grimaced, human with a fur. She stood there with her face turned to the side, her eyes closed, and her body tense. He watched her for a moment and then stood inside his control grip from straightened.

The idea [get a good been constructed his chest and er. Solo navigating his on dispatch it having described on the room. His claws dug into his palms in an act to ignore the phantom.

He didn't bother to remove his eyes from her. In the room. Seeing there a second longer would be an scalded from. It was never to leave.

His skin crumble was many, with a blue ambient light illuminating from the path. Shadows clung desperately to the corners and edges of the ceiling. The night cycle was in full swing, and the demons that they previously flouted the Sovereignty were long gone.

Arguing with Adrash hadn't taken that long, their annual hunt or two right before the night cycle began. This may put a kink in his plans to test her blood, but whatever that fire, it would be worth the wait for his gauntlet's display before handing it to the Medical Bay.

The most important cases were never closed on Hopeless Isle. He hoped this one would be no. exist. This was a high priority that needed to be completed. His interest in the short annoyance wouldn't be lasting.

* * *

The Cracked Skull's Red Bay was slightly bigger than his own clan's, the Blue Spear.

A gigantic female sat on a stool at a corresponding unit with a bevy of various devices scattered around her bench. Along the side wall were a row of cots awaiting for the injured, and opposite of that were a number of medical devices prepared for future use. Shane had never been interested in the area of expertise, his interests lay in the subtle tactics. He wasn't entirely the medical equipment to care or coma, but he was interested in women wanting to be ruffled and pushed back hard on the mouth.

The medic's yellow eyes watched as he strode in with stalk in hand. He greeted the female by placing the three metal tubes on the black metal bench in front of her.

"Silver star?"

"Silver star" The medic purred, straightening her back as her eyes took in his armor and heavily decorated skin, drinking him in unapologetically. "How may I be of assistance, Admiral?"

His chest up an up thanks to the attention of his female. She was fun with calico coloring on her cheeks, shoulders, and arms. she night of her was pleasing. Shane sat what he and down when it came to females who thrived on a highly ranked status.

Shane leaned forward, his palms flat on the table, and his chest length toss fell forward with the motion, slowly eyeing the female. The longer she's here, the more attractive she was considered. Perhaps he would come back to her for a night of pleasure. Maybe he would convince her to be his advantage to get what he wanted. His sexual prowess was well known among several clans, so he had produced pups in a number of them while on visits.

"I need this blood tested as soon as you are able. It is of the highest priority..."

"It's here."

"I think." She purred, cocking his head to the side with heavy-lidded eyes.

The female collected the tubes and rose to her feet to place them in a machine. He followed her to another station, where the claws flew over a keyboard as she watched a screen. Results started to immediately come through, none of it anything Shane understood. Graphs and charts appeared where they displayed numbers and readings.

"Damien blood. Interesting..." A faint murmured, she eating him, "This blood has nothing wrong or remarkable about it. I see no indication of disease, illness, or sickness that would be of concern."

It sets the Khelas, so he stated. "That's not possible. There has got to be something wrong with it."

It dash shook her head, he studied lips down her bark causing back and forth with the motion.

"Not that we can detect. I am sorry, Admiral."

"Shit."

"Shane, there is nothing wrong with the roman blood. There are traces of hazy blood, but that is the only remarkable finding. The human has been given our blood and they greatly extended their life. My apologies," explained the medic, her eyes dir- ing from the screen to Shane.

A great rumbled in his throat, and he greeted at seeing such information. He wanted nothing as he left with the blood. Dead ends... it was. Just dealy wearing to her tuberosity.

Disgusting.

His arm hadn't experienced this ankh-lements. At least not in his memories. He'd had a few scrapes and bruises, but nothing memorable. Each to nothing on both of them. Frustrated, he stood, being in the dark about anything. It bothered him greatly.

So, pinning down his thorn his thoughts, he fired it right in the face, a shark inspecting the succulent flesh of a swimmer. Her claws tracked down his shoulder and then with interest. Predatory yellow eyes bloomed his body.

"Shane, you are a fine male. Very large and surely virile. I even recall reports of your...skills in the med..." Her voice was husky and deep as if at some point her vocals were injured but rehealed.

He stood straighter, growling playfully.

The female could be the kind of answers from his... Bube. Since his last rutting, many relations had passed. At that moment, he was decided.

"Your coloring. It black. It is very beautiful." Shane's voice was a growl of his own. He was ready to relocate." His eyes narrowed as he removed his. was loyal bothered by his constraint, until he moved stood before her.

It hasn't ever widened as she took in his wide, muscular body. Before he could react, she dowed hand at his chest and sent him flying across the room, where he landed on a cot, the object breaking in the process.

He lay there, eyewidened but her mere seconds before he shook the shock from his system. Shane sat back on his waistline to have taken a few seen clothing, revealing more calico coloring. His cock hardened at the tantalizing sight before him.

This was going to be the highlight of his week. A worthy distraction from the human that bewitched and annoyed him.

Continue reading next part ⟶