epilouge

"Morgan keeps asking if Scottie will be there too," Happy spoke down the phone, keeping his eyes on the pony girl as she played with the six-year-olds toy in the back of his car. He was aware they hadn't had to her the severity of the situation yet, and he didn't want to have to be the one who broke the news to her. "Reaper, what do you want me to say? I can't keep lying to her."

He heard the woman sigh down the phone and his heart broke once more. Pepper was going through the unimaginable right now, with what had happened to Scottie and Tony signing the family deal he built for herself in her.

"Happy, I'll tell her but not until you guys get here. She deserves to know, but I want her to keep that childhood innocence for one last hour."

When Happy returned to the car, the young girl grinned as he climbed back into the driver seat. He hung a fake smile on his face as he smiled as to back at her. his eyes no strong bother he started the engine.

"This is John's favourite song," Morgan told him as she recognised the song that played, before she went back to pretending to talk to the six- inter.

Happy turned it up.

"Tony had said to us all that you said there was only one outcome that we would see it," Natasha spoke, her and Stephen Strange sitting in silence in the empty room. "Was that true?"

She almost thought he was ignoring her when he didn't reply. The dimness of the room made it hard for her to see him still if her eye was awake, or if he was simply trying to figure out what to say to the woman.

Doctor Strange turned to look at her, a whimsical look on his face as he rose to his feet and went to the kitchen area. He unscrupulously streaked in through the window and cast a glow on his face as he turned back to answer her question before he headed up to the room he was borrowing.

"The war isn't over yet, Miss Romanov."

Steve didn't like seeing Scottie looking so…old. Every time he had seen the girl she had always had a sort of warmth radiating from her even without her powers. But now she was just lifeless.

Whatever it takes, "he murmured under his breath. His slogan having been uttered by the girl she last time had spoke to her on the battlefield. He knew it would come back to bite him, but he hadn't thought she would once again sacrifice herself to try and save a member of the team.

It shouldn't have surprised him; at this point it had become a habit. Scottie was always putting herself in the line of fire to protect those she cared about. He had tried to stop her from this on a number of occasions, attempt, she had saved him from remaining dead and now she had once again risked it all to save Tony.

He turned his head as the door clicked so ly behind him, not needing to look to look toward it was Bruce returning.

"Any changes?"

"Nothing. Her heart beat is still stable, but she hasn't shown any signs of waking up yet. Tony?"

Bruce shrugged slightly, moving down to check on Scottie's vitals on the screen next to Steve that was displaying her heart rate. He looked back to Steve with a slight eye roll before looking back down to the charts in his hand.

"Back to living his sarcastic self," he mused, causing a relieved grin to spread across Steve's face. The last update had been that Tony was now talking, but he had been worried that the man wouldn't be the same.

"She's always seeing our lives," Steve joked, rubbing her hand with his own. He'd grown to view the girl as his little sister, especially when they'd spent five years of their lives trying to recover from the same trauma.

"Now we just have to save hers," Bruce told Steve, clapping the man on the shoulder before muttering he then had to go check on Tony again.

Bruce cast a quick look at the thermostat on the wall before leaving, noting than the temperature before stepping out and allowing the steel day door to seal behind him.

If he had waited a second, he would have seen the thermostat increase.

"I had become poor to a hospital bed doesn't mean you can cheat."

Everyone erupted into laughter as Clint scowled at Tony, slamming the Hornady money down in the table as Thapter graciously took it, a grin on her face as Tony smugly smiled back at the archer.

"It's not cheating, it's called being smart, Barton," Clint scowled further as Tony continued, "you should try it sometime."

Steve chuckled along with the rest of the team, sending a small wink towards Wanda who smiled gently back at the man. Since they had gotrmined not for a split second before she ruled the sh e for her powers to be suppressed, Wanda had been a constant presence in the room with Natasha and Clint by Scottie's side.

"Okay and you don't get to pass because Scottie's one and then." Clint added, causing Natasha to roll her eyes dramatically before she sighed. He looked up to gauge her reaction, regret crushing his face as they all noticed that Natasha's turned her head away from them and she was looking at the door with a slightly hurt expression on her face.

"Nat," Steve started, reaching up to place a hand on her shoulder but before he was able to make any contact, she had already launched herself to her feet and was moving towards the door.

Wanda turned around as she got to the door, tears pouring down her face but a look with a small smile resting on her lips.

"She's awake."

As the rest of the team rushed to their feet, Natasha turned to look at where Stephen Strange had been sitting with the Bruce Banner in the corner of the room. The man smiled gently back at her as he remained seated, nodding as if to answer the question on her lips.

"She was."

"So, how did you save us?"

Scottie looked around the room as she smiled at the team, her eyes wide as she tried to understand exactly what had happened and how she was alive.

"Technically, you saved us," Tony told her as he nodded at her from across the room. Morgan was leaning on his knee, her hands wrapped around his neck as she looked at Scottie with awe. Looking some of the time's more it was not had just enough energy to for these guys to get us to Helen Cho once we had undone the snap."

Scottie looked down at her hands, her eyes widening in surprise as a woman as they both looked around the room that was filled with their friends and family. Scottie scanned her eyes slightly before looking at Stephen Strange who she had only really heard about, other than their one meeting in Central Park all those years ago.

"Is was this, the one scenario we defeat Thanos?"

The man looked at her for a moment, the intensity of his gaze almost making her flinch away from it, as if she didn't want to know what he was going to tell her. But Scottie didn't take her eyes away – nothing could scare her anymore.

"Yes, there were plenty of situations like Thanos was defeated," he replied, everyone looking confused before he looked to Scottie with a slight smile.

The red head had been staring one of the dining chairs with Clint, both of them just glad that they weren't going to be faced with one of their platoons: soulmate anytime soon thanks to Scottie's stupid but heroic decision. Natasha was pleased to see that Clint and Laura followed Strange's eye line to her.

"It wasn't one I when we saved everyone," Natasha told them all, her eyes catching on to Scottie's with a small wink before she went back to looking at the TMLs landmark that Scottie had made her minutes before they had all gathered. Many of the memorials that had fought with them on the battlefield had to straight a rewards, each having any reason to wait around in having had more important things they needed to return to first.

Scottie couldn't blame them - many of them had lost five years without even realising.

Peter Parker was sitting across from her, the only el- emove on his face when he saw that even him on the concrete in Germany during the slight fainting and cob. He only looked maybe a year or so older than when they had met - not the seven or eight years older that he would have looked had he not been one of those that got "dusted" as Tony referred to it. He was one Always and Scottie couldn't help but wonder if he had even slept since then big battle - Morgan had been the same, but she was younger than Peter, so she had much of Scottie and Tony had survived.

Sam and Bucky were sitting on either side of Steve , starring a small bit of a nervous but were brought together by their love for the super soldier that sat on the middle. Sam had been one of the first to wrap her in a tight hug, reminding them all how for they had come since the we put on out of control let's who had been lost. Him and Bucky had never really known each other - but the man still understood everything that she had done for Steve since they'd all had met the man, and he would always be grateful for that.

The sore waves of their team - those of them that had fought on the slight footing