

My Sweetheart

Chapter 5 Within Three Days, I Would Take Her Here

• • •

The Joseph's family.

It was already early in the morning, Joseph came back from the hospital, and Mathew, his grandfather, had not got rested yet.

"Going on a date?" Mathew looked at his grandson and smelled the scent of disinfectant on Joseph's body when he approached.

"I had a surgery." Joseph said indifferently.

"What about my granddaughter-in-law?" Mathew asked. He had already ordered that Joseph must take his girlfriend here in a month!

Hearing this, Joseph stopped, thought about the appearance of Kathy, and thought out an idea.

"Within three days, I will take her here."

"Really?" Mathew had had no hope for his grandson's marriage, and was very happy when heard this.

"Yes." Joseph responded, and went upstairs to his room.

Matthew rubbed his beards and patted his thighs.

This was the first time his grandson promised to took his girlfriend home!

It seemed to be they were really going to get married!

The next day, Kathy woke up early. Joseph's business card put beside her pillow. She repeatedly confirmed that it indicated he was ... chief neurologist on the business card?

She thought he was the rich second generation who didn't attend to proper business.

Thinking of this, and he had sent her to home last time, which seemed that the person is also very good man.

When Kathy came to her sense, she had come to the hospital.

This is the best hospital in Boston. There is no one was well matched to it. The doctors who can work here were outstanding enough. The accident rate is almost zero.

She looked at the introduction of the department doctor hanging on the wall and quickly found the name of Joseph Row.

He was the director of the department ... the president of the World Parkinson and Dyskinesia Society ... the president of the World Neuropathy Society ... the director of the International Institute of Medicine...

Kathy didn't understand many terms on the introduction! What she could get was that Joseph was excellent.

"God, I can't book a reservation of the appointment of Dr. Joseph!"

"What? Dr. Joseph has full appointments? Oh, God, doesn't it regulate that we can reserve online after eight o'clock?"

"Yeah, my computer broke down, and I can't pay for it! Oh, Dr. Joseph only accepts the appointment in a morning one week, and I have to wait for the next week."

Kathy frowned and turned to see many people gathered at the registration desk.

"He is so popular?" Kathy thought suspiciously.

It seemed that he would be very busy. It was not the proper time for her to come.

Kathy turned to go, and the elevator door in front of her opened. Kathy was squeezed into the elevator before she could react.

Unfortunately, Joseph stood beside her.

This was the first time Kathy saw him wearing a white coat. He became amiable in the uniform. His appearance was outstanding.

He seemed tired, and there were dark circles below his eyes.

Kathy wanted to speak, and the people crowded to surround Joseph.

"Dr. Joseph, can you accept a little more appointments? I haven't got a reservation for a month!"

"Go away! I have been making a reservation for half a year. Doctor Joseph, please give me a reservation number!"

"Dr. Joseph, my right face is stiff, can you help me check it ..."

Kathy was stunned again, didn't when the elevator had opened, and the crowd had already followed Joseph out.

Did Joseph notice her just now?

She was in the corner, and he was surrounded by the crowd, so she thought that he didn't see her.

At this moment, a nurse came over, "Is Miss Kathy?"

"I am." Kathy looked at her suspiciously.

"Dr. Joseph asked me to come over. He is busy now. I will take you to his lounge and you can wait for him for a while."

□□□□

• • •