Chapter 1191

They were not in a hurry. All they wanted was to be safe.

Therefore, Zander had worked out a relatively safe route the night before.

Even if he could not avoid all the cameras perfectly, they could do their best not to give away their whereabouts.

Sean sat in the car and turned to look out the window.

It was past 5 a.m. and was still dark.

The sky had brightened a little.

Their car sped along the road without seeing any vehicles or people.

As he looked at the street lamps flashing past the car window, Sean had mixed feelings.

He took over the small River City in just over a month.

Now, they had to leave their homes and travel again.

He only hoped he could achieve his goal and get help successfully in Joules Town.

After all, it was hard for him to compete with Blaze on his own.

“Commander, wait a minute. I’m getting off the car to change the license plate.”

After a short drive, Zander pulled over and pulled a new license plate out of the trunk to cover the old one. He was a scout before Sean.

Therefore, he was skilled in reconnaissance and counter–reconnaissance.

Otherwise, Blaze would not have taken a month to notice something was wrong with Zander.

Zander settled everything quickly and even changed the car logo before getting back in the car.

Halfway through, Zander slowed down again.

"Commander, I didn't think this through....

"Surely you have plans and someone you want to use?"

Zander blushed a little as he spoke.

Since Sean said he was coming to Joules Town, Zander had been handling everything.

He suddenly realized he had never even asked Sean's advice.

He did not ask about Sean's plans or who he was looking for after they arrived.

Instead, he went ahead looking for his former subordinate with Sean.

It was quite inappropriate.

"There's no rush.

"Follow the GPS."

Sean waved his hand slightly, not caring about it.

He had a plan in mind, of course. He never did anything he was unsure of.

However, he knew Zander was loyal and that he wanted to see his former subordinate.

"Commander, I'm sorry.

"Your plan matters the most. We'd better not go.

"I'll come and see them when I have time."

Zander said quietly, rubbing his nose.

Sean glanced at Zander and understood what was on Zander's mind.

Zander was in front as he heard Sean’s mutter, but he did not inquire.

Zander did not speak until Sean pulled himself together and picked up his pace.

“Commander, there’s a fortune teller here.

“Why don’t we have our fortunes told?”

Carried away by a whim, Zander suddenly pointed to one of the stalls and said.

The man sitting in that booth was a monk and not a shaman.

He sat cross-legged silently with his eyes narrowed slightly while others shouted to attract business.

“What fortune?”

Sean glanced and withdrew his gaze.

“Let’s see if our trip will be a success.

“And whether we can get our revenge.”

Zander asked somewhat expectantly, rubbing his hands together.

However, Sean shook his head slightly in disdain.

“I never believed in such things.

“We control our destiny.”

Zander immediately dismissed his idea as soon as Sean said that.

“Please stay, sir.”

Sean did not want to have his fortune told, but the monk stopped Sean when they passed by him.

Both Zander and Sean stopped and looked around.

The monk was indeed calling Sean!

Sean slowly turned his head and looked at the monk without speaking.

The monk slowly opened his narrowed eyes and stared at Sean carefully.

It was not until this moment that Sean realized how deep the monk’s eyes were.

Jeffrey was a member of the one hundred thousand personal guards.

Sean was his idol and he worshipped him like a god. He had no regrets, even if he had to go through the deadliest battles.

He thought he would never see Sean again, but he was excited to meet him again.

“Save the salute.”

Sean stepped forward and took Jeffrey’s arm.

“Commander...

“We agreed to wait for your return together.

“But I couldn’t wait for you and had to be discharged first. I’m sorry.”

Jeffrey wiped the corners of his eyes, ashamed.

“I know it’s not your fault.

“Have a seat.”

Sean held Jeffrey, trying to get him to sit down.

“Commander, I can’t sit.”

Jeffrey dared not sit down in front of Sean.

It meant he was Sean’s equal, which was impossible.

“I’m not a commander right now.

“We’re friends.”

Sean looked at Jeffrey and said earnestly.

Jeffrey still refused but could only follow orders after Zander reproached him.

Sean helped Jeffrey and sat with Zander in a nearby chair.

It was not until much later that Jeffrey calmed down.

Jeffrey kept talking, and his words were incoherent with excitement.

Sean stopped Zander with a gaze when Zander tried to explain the purpose of their visit.

The people who sacrificed for Dragon Kingdom were true heroes.

It only made sense to visit him.

Jeffrey looked at Sean and tried to speak.

However, Sean held out his hand and stopped Jeffrey, so Jeffrey could only remain silent.

“Are these enough?”

Sean asked indifferently, pointing to the money on the table.

“Oh, you should have told me in the beginning!

“They're enough. They're enough. I'll prepare the food for you.”

Tanya's expression changed faster than she could flip a switch.

She had always had the impression that soldiers like Jeffrey were poor.

However, someone wealthy came here today.

Fifty thousand dollars might be nothing to a lot of people.

However, fifty thousand dollars was a huge sum for a place like theirs where living costs and average income were low.

It was enough to feed a family for two years.

Tanya stepped forward and reached for the money, but Jeffrey stopped her.

“What are you doing?”

Tanya immediately frowned and snapped at Jeffrey.

“I... I can't charge my friends!”

Jeffrey blushed but said through gritted teeth.

“If we don't charge them, how am I gonna cook for them?”

The young man's clothes were not cheap. His shiny, slicked-back hairstyle looked as if it was licked by a COW.

"Tyson!"

Jeffrey clenched his fist at the sight of the young man, and his eyes were gloomy.

"Oh, Brother Tyson?"

Tanya immediately greeted the young man with a coquettish smile.

She was so friendly she was like a nightclub escort greeting her client.

"What's the matter? Did you miss me?"

Tyson chuckled and glanced at Tanya's long legs.

"Tsk, you speak as if you didn't miss me."

Tanya gave a seductive glance and giggled.

The two ignored Jeffrey and flirted right in front of him.

Zander turned and stared at Jeffrey in disbelief.

He could not believe Jeffrey had put up with that.

Jeffrey acted as if he did not see it.

"No..."

Zander could not help speaking.

However, Sean stopped Zander by giving him a look.

Family matters were difficult, and he did not want to meddle in Jeffrey's family matters.

After all, it was Jeffrey's choice.

"What would you like to eat? I'll make it for you."

Tanya looked at Tyson and was nice to him.

“You don’t deserve to call me Commander.”

Sean withdrew his gaze and said indifferently.

Jeffrey shuddered before slowly looking at Tyson.

“Do it.”

Zander ordered.

“Okay!”

No longer hesitating, Jeffrey picked up the coffee pot and smashed it on Tyson’s head.

“What are you doing?”

Just then, Tanya rushed out and yelled at Sean and the rest.

Swoosh!

Jeffrey stopped subconsciously.

“Smash it!”

Sean ordered again.

Bang!

Not daring to disobey, Jeffrey smashed hard.

That smash made Tyson see stars.

The boiling coffee even made him scream.

“Hunter, I’m gonna kill you today!”

Feeling the pain, Tyson’s eyes reddened instantly as he punched at Jeffrey.

However, Zander was faster than him.

He had barely raised his fist when Zander hit him squarely in the face.

Thump! Thump! Thump! Thump! Thump!

It knocked Tyson back a few steps, and his nose started bleeding immediately,

Tyson stumbled a few steps back and fell flat on the ground with a thump. Bang!

Zander stepped forward and stepped on Tyson’s chest.

“Let him go!”

Tanya rushed over to stop Zander.

“A big shot with the last name Collins?”

Jeffrey instantly thought about it after hearing Zander's question.

He knew that anyone Zander considered a big shot was no ordinary person.

They were either a big shot in the army or the government.

As for the plutocrats, members of the army never regarded them as big shots.

"There are a lot of wealthy people with the last name Collins.

"But I'm not sure about government officials with the last name Collins."

Jeffrey thought for a moment before shaking his head gently.

After all, he lived far from Joules Town.

After he was discharged from the army, he had no assignments or access to the big shots.

Therefore, he did not know much about the government or the garrison at Joules Town.

"Commander, do you know anything more?"

Zander asked, scratching his head and looking at Sean.

"No."

Sean pondered for two seconds before shaking his head helplessly.

He was still young at the time and had been living in an orphanage before Colin took him away. He had never seen much of the outside world after that.

Sean had only gone to the home of Colin's friend with the last name Collins once. He did not even remember the location.

Jeffrey took one last look and slowly closed the door.

Standing in front of the door, Sean looked at the bustling bazaar, but he was no longer fidgety.

He had returned to his hometown after ten years.

It would be a good idea to stay here for a while.

People from the same place shared the same habits.

After all, Sean had stayed in Joules Town for ten years.

It was considered his hometown.

“Brother Woody! There they are!”

Just then, a shout broke Sean’s daze.

20 to 30 youths came from the distance.

They carried weapons like daggers, spears, and sticks—looking intimidating.

The speaker at the front was Tyson.

He shouted to Sean to wait. He did what he said and called people.

The originally bustling bazaar suddenly became much quieter.

The shoppers and street vendors lowered their heads silently.

From the look of fear in these people’s eyes, these people must have a reputation around here.

Sure enough, pedestrians moved away from places Tyson and the rest passed by.

The young man beside Tyson walked in the middle, his eyes full of arrogance.

“Commander, his name is Woody Matterson. He’s a notorious bully in this town.

Back in the day, Zander was the leader of Sean's personal guard.

How could he get to that position if he was incapable?

Zander might not be as tough as Sean, but he could easily deal with 30 or 50 ordinary adults.

Thump!

Bang!

One after another, young men fell to the ground, unable to get up.

You could even hear screams ringing continuously.

Zander had knocked down half of the crowd in a minute.

These people could never even hit Zander.

“F*ck! F*ck! How crazy!”

“This is awesome. Is he a martial artist?”

“Hsss! How strong! He’s strong!”

The people in the market were aghast.

Woody, Tyson, and Tanya, also widened their eyes in disbelief.

They thought Sean, Zander, and the cripple Jeffrey would be easy to deal with since there were only three of them.

However, they did not expect Sean to do nothing and ask Zander to fight alone.

Besides that, Zander alone could easily knock down two dozen of them.

Thump!

Woody gulped.

They had f*cking hit a snag.

“That loser Jeffrey. How... How did he have such a strong friend...”

Tyson’s eyes widened, nervous.

Thump!

Zander clapped his hands when the last young man fell to the ground, looking relaxed.

More than two dozen people lay on the ground, moaning.
