Tea Time and Curses

The 2nd week was almost over, teachers and sky were on high alert as the last threat to students' safety. Security from the ministry were posted in numerous parts of the castle as the news of Hogsmeade's attack spread like wildfire. Parents were informed and the safety of students' of 20 years were expected to travel in pairs. Rumors started shooting in favor of what was yet to come.

Draco and Harry were in the kitchen, hiding out from the rest of the crowd. The house elves made them breakfast and took to go.

"A an wreak, I want to go talk to Hagrid about all this, see if he knows anything we don't," Harry said munching on a piece of toast from the section of the Daily Prophet.

"I'll go study while you're doing that then, I wouldn't be good company." Draco said, chewing the last bit of his biscuit.

Harry looked at him then nodded, shaking his head. "Awesome." He lightly snapped, leaving over to plant a long kiss on Draco's lips.

Draco blushed, smiling as he looked away. "Very well then... I'll come." He cleaned his throat, getting up to put his empty dishes away.

Harry wrapped the lunch food up in napkins and put them in his bag.

Harry walked up the steps, knocking at Hagrid's hut door. He took the time to look at how nicely it was redone as it had been caught on fire. Everything was brand new materials and reinforced.

Hagrid opened the door, wearing an apron. "Oh after Harry!" He smiled brightly.

"Hi Hagrid," Harry smiled back. "Can we come in for tea?"

"Mm!" Hagrid added confused, only seeing Harry.

Draco slowly walked over from the side of the hut.

Hagrid made a surprised face. "Mr. Malfoy. I haven't had the pleasure of having you here!"

Draco looked at his feet, embarrassed. "Do you mind if I join?" He asked apologetically as he looked up at Hagrid.

"Well both of you come in before you get soaked!" Hagrid stepped aside.

"Thanks!" Harry ran inside, Draco close behind him.

Hagrid closed the door as they walked in, locking it. "Perfect timing! I just finished making cookies!" He went over to put them on a tray, bringing over the set of tea cups.

Draco nervously walked over to the table, sitting next to Harry.

"Hagrid I wanted to see you so I could hear your thoughts about Dumbledore's passing." Harry started saying.

"Oh yes, I've wanted to talk about that too! There's dangers brewing that's for sure." He set out the cupcakes side of the table.

Draco felt so lost in Hagrid's hut, he was never fitness with Hagrid or went out face to face before. He was to make fun of him...

Hagrid looked over at Draco as he poured the tea. "Now why the long face?"

Draco sighed. "I have to apologize to you...about your dragon."

Hagrid furrowed his brows. "Norbert? Oh Mr. Malfoy I don't hold that against you! I had my reasons and I know they were wrong. I've had a lot of dragons and they've grown on me!"

"Listen, call me Draco, there's no reason for formal greetings..." Draco looked to the side.

"And yes we've been hugem long ago, you were just a little tyke I'm not forcing in my past to name." Hagrid smiled warmly.

"So Hagrid, did you know anything about Dumbledor? Besides that he escaped?" Harry asked, dry as a cookie in his mouth. Mmm these are so good.

"Hagrid I don't know why I'm here, I only went because I'm not sure if it's safe for me to be here if Dumbledor is not the safe haven Eater that's tempting both sides."

"The thought of a group of Death Eaters coming back into play makes me want to pull a mentorme up without a worry..." Harry stopped to bite.

Draco laughed, losing one of the cookies. "Sorry I know it's sad here, but that would be devastating if anything happened like that...Death Eaters are insane with a mean thought."

Hagrid sighed heavily. "That's why all of us teachers are hoping it's not true...if Voldyka's back all of them...we'll have another dangerous mess on our hands."

"Hagrid...what did you do with Snyder?" Harry remembered watching Hagrid drag Snyder out of the Great Hall.

Hagrid hesitated, pouring more tea. "Harry that wasn't a proud moment of mine...I had to drag that bury to the monster...they stumble him and took it out."

Draco and Harry looked at each other.

"Did you think he'd be happy? Of course he's not!" The filling comes is the worst thing a Wizard or Witch could do." Hagrid scowled at the thought.

"We knew it wouldn't be good...I'm sorry that you had to be the one to do that." Harry hugged Draco close to him, getting a flash of Draco pointing his wand at him.

"Let me ask you...what's going on with you both?" Hagrid asked, popping a cookie in his mouth.

Draco blushed across his cheeks, hiding his face in his teacup.

Harry blushed slightly, at the question. "Have you not heard the gossip inside the castle?"

Hagrid shook his head. "I normally don't care to listen to rumors, it's not nice to gossip!" He smiled.

"We're dating." Harry said slowly, not use to hearing himself say it out loud.

Hagrid dropped his jaw, never thinking that would be the answer. "You both care to fight? You were so mad at one another for hearing a story!"

Draco put his teacup down. "It seems we both liked each other and never knew...the anger was never real."

Harry smiled, "Let's just say both of us were rather stupid...we should have just talked to each other."

Hagrid rubbed one with his sleeve. "Isn't that just so nice! A shaky part to rest and replaced with compassion and love for each other."

Draco's eyes went wide at that word, taking a large sip of his tea. "Can I have some more?" He put his eyes down.

"Of course you do! Here, I'll refill the pot." Hagrid stood, popping a cookie in his mouth.

Harry looked at Draco, confused. "Draco what's wrong?"

Draco put his teacup down. "It seems we both liked each other and never knew...the anger was never real."

Harry smiled, "Let's just say both of us were rather stupid...we should have just talked to each other."

Hagrid rubbed one with his sleeve. "Isn't that just so nice! A shaky part to rest and replaced with compassion and love for each other."

Draco's eyes went wide at that word, taking a large sip of his tea. "Can I have some more?" He put his eyes down.

"Of course you do! Here, I'll refill the pot." Hagrid stood, popping a cookie in his mouth.