

Timeless 571

CHAPTER 571 BEING AMUSED FOR THE SECOND TIME

On the road Dante sent Elyse back just now, he took almost a dozen phone calls during the ten-minute walk, and he did not have time to say a word to Elyse.

As soon as they got out of Aggie's flat, Elyse told him with a smile that he did not need to send her. Before he could say anything, his phone rang, and Elyse directly turned around and walked away. He had to answer the phone while striding to catch up with Elyse. Elyse took an angry glance at him from time to time, as if he was a weird stalker.

But he was just worried about her safety because it was very late.

Even though Elyse lived in this neighborhood, accidents might happen if the security was not good here.

During the period, he received many calls from various people, some of whom were Tam's business partners. They went out of their way to inquire about the identity of Tam's new girlfriend, with the intention of pleasing her in the future so that she could say something nice about them to Tam.

Some calls were from women who admired Tam. They called Dante directly to question or inquire about what was going on with Tam and whether this relationship was a false hype or a sincere love.

Jennie was one of those women. Jennie just went to visit Tam in the morning and was rejected by him. In the evening, Tam announced he had a new girlfriend. You could imagine how heartbroken Jennie was.

But Dante did not say anything. He just told them to ask Tam after Tam turned his phone on.

In the end, Dante was so annoyed that he also turned off the phone, but Elyse had already arrived. She hurried into the flat in a flash, without even saying goodbye to him.

Tam continued to walk slowly, "Just turn off your phone. Why are they making a fuss about me having a girlfriend?"

Dante complained, "You used to expose your girlfriend's identity and face when you were dating someone. Now you keep it a secret, of course, they will make a fuss about it!"

Especially those women; they wanted to vent the fury buried long in their hearts.

Tam used to directly disclose the identity of his girlfriend, and those women who were attracted to Tam could directly vent their anger to his new girlfriend. They could hire some people to make negative comments about his girlfriend online to vent their grievances and losses.

Even if they still had to accept the fact that Tam was not available anymore, they felt relieved after venting their anger to the woman who got Tam.

However, now no one knew the identity of his new girlfriend, and they had nowhere to vent their anger, so they were irritated.

The most important thing was that Tam did not disclose any information about his new girlfriend this time in order to protect her, which he never had done before. That proved that he was taking this relationship seriously.

The women got more and more furious when they thought about this. Tam owned a media company, and he was in contact with people in the entertainment industry all day. Among the women who admired Tam, there were a bunch of famous ladies in South City, but the majority of those women were actresses and models in the entertainment industry, irrespective of their popularity.

The women of the entertainment industry were known for their strength. Aggie, who was taking a leisurely bath at home, was unaware that she had become the public enemy of half of the female stars of the entertainment industry.

Tam curved his lips and smiled after listening to Dante's words, "Looking back, it was right to promise her to keep our relationship a secret for now."

Tam naturally knew how aggressive the women in the entertainment circle were. Maybe they had already mobilized the power of their fans and all the connections they could use to find out Aggie's identity. Once her identity was exposed, Aggie was bound to be attacked with abuse.

But she was just a doctor who lived a simple life, and it was not fair to her to get involved in it.

Tam pondered with a frown while walking. Perhaps he had better keep this relationship a secret in the future. Only in this way could Aggie be well protected. In the future, when their relationship was mature and stable, he would choose to announce it and take measures to minimize the attack on Aggie.

If someone stood in his way then, he would do whatever it took.

The reporters outside the neighborhood and in front of the hospital had all been driven away by Dante's men, and the two returned to the hospital without incident.

Originally Tam decided to ignore those reporters waiting at the entrance of the hospital, anyway, he would be discharged from the hospital in the next few days, and would not leave from the main entrance, so those reporters would have no effect on him. But now they were all waiting at the entrance of Aggie's neighborhood. This time Tam had to take measures.

He drove them away and warned them not to post it. He thought no one would gossip about it in the future.

Back to his ward, the first thing Tam did after washing up was to lazily lean on the bed and make a video call to Aggie.

But Aggie quickly hung up and refused to answer his call.

Then she sent a message asking him: What's up?

Tam replied discontentedly: I miss you and want to see you.

Aggie was speechless by his words. She was still in the bathtub, and she was about to get out when she received his video call. How could she possibly show him her look now? So she hung up immediately.

Seeing that she did not reply, Tam continued to ask persistently: Why not let me see you? Are you planning on something bad behind my back?

Tam was just kidding, and Aggie replied: I was in the bath. Wait a sec.

After this reply, Aggie hurriedly took a bath towel to wrap herself and went out from the bathtub. Then Tam sent her another message: Beauty in the bath! I want to see it.

Aggie's face was a little hot, and she complained in her heart: This shameless man.

She ignored him and went to dry her hair and applied skincare products to her face.

Tam, however, was suffering on the hospital bed. He stared at the word "bath" and his imagination began to run wild.

The more he thought about it, the more he hated Alia. If his arm hadn't got hurt because of Alia, he might soon be able to put Aggie in his arms.

Alia and Tam's father didn't make any trouble this day. Tam heard that his father spent most of the day in resuscitation yesterday after he fainted with anger, and Alia couldn't see anyone because her face was swollen from his beating. Tam was happy not to be disturbed by them.

But it didn't mean that he would stop there, nor did it mean that Alia and his father had surrendered. Tam heard that his father was asking his friends for help, looking for people to invest in Finger Group to fight Tam's acquisition. His father even called his own parents, or, Tam's grandparents.

Thinking of it, Tam couldn't help but sneer. His father was really stupid. Tam's grandparents had been caring for Tam since childhood, and Tam was the only heir of their family. They had long acquiesced to Tam's acquisition of Finger Group. For them, as long as the Finger Group belonged to Tam, they didn't care how Tam got it.

Even though Old Mr. Finger was Howard's father, he would not help Howard, just as Howard did to his own son, Tam.

The reason why Tam's grandparents loved him and allowed him to do whatever he wanted was that Tam was the only heir of the Finger family. Another reason was Tam's mother.

As the daughter-in-law of the Finger family, Tam's mother was virtuous, gentle, filial, and considerate. Tam's grandparents were very satisfied with his mother as their daughter-in-law.

When his mother was seriously ill, she comforted Tam's grandparents and thoughtfully asked them to find a wife for Howard as soon as possible. Tam's grandparents were very touched.

Howard and Alia hooked up when Tam's mother was still seriously ill. Tam's grandfather was angry and wanted to break off relation with Howard. He even wanted to take Finger Group back from Howard and hand it down to Tam, but Tam refused. From that moment on, Tam had made up his mind to get Finger Group back in the way he used today.

He wouldn't leave a penny to Howard and Alia.

So Howard wouldn't get any help from Tam's grandparents.

Tam loved and respected his grandparents, and if the two old people didn't agree with him to do so, he would consider changing his way, but they unconditionally supported him, so Tam had nothing to worry about.

While thinking about these things, Tam received Aggie's video call.

He answered the call and saw her shocking face that looked like a Geisha—short, thick black eyebrows, red lips and cheeks, and a face as white as flour.

Tam, "..."

Aggie tried her best to hold back laughter, otherwise, the mask would fall off her face.

It was a prank. Originally she just wanted to put on a mask and then called Tam, but when looking for the mask, she suddenly saw this Geisha mask. Elyse gave it to her a few days ago and she had not had time to use it.

Thinking of the shameless words Tam just said, she also wanted to play a trick on him.

She didn't know why she got so excited. Usually, she wasn't interested in anything.

But at this time, looking at Tam's gloomy face, she inexplicably felt in a good mood.

Tam gritted his teeth and said coldly, "Dr. Winn, I have a heart problem. If you give me a heart attack, you have to be responsible for the rest of my life."

Aggie responded quickly, "It doesn't matter. The hospital you're in now has the best cardiology department in South City, and you'll definitely be cured."

Tam laughed and complained, "Other people find a girlfriend to get more fun, but I find a girlfriend to shorten my life!"

Aggie admitted that Tam was quite humorous and his self-deprecating tone amused her. This was the second time tonight that she had been amused by Tam and laughed out loud, and the mask she had just put on her face was messed up. She had to leave the camera and took off the mask.

CHAPTER 572 WHAT A NOTORIOUS INDUSTRY!

Aggie took off the mask, washed her face, and appeared on camera with a white face.

She deliberately did not wear any makeup, anyway, she did not think this relationship would last long. Maybe Tam would be scared away by her face without makeup and stop pestering her.

Tam looked at Aggie's fresh look in the camera and was in a good mood. He found Aggie looked both beautiful with or without makeup on and couldn't help but recite a poem as praise of her beauty.

She was the so-called born beauty.

When Aggie heard him referring to that poem, she was a little discouraged.

She thought he would be scared by her face, but unexpectedly, he praised her beauty with a poem instead.

After dodging for a while, Aggie said, "I'll hang up if there's nothing else. I want to take a beauty sleep."

Tam refused, "It's still early. We can talk for a while."

Aggie didn't want to chat with him. She didn't think she had any common language with him.

"Oh, I remembered, I need to keep a work diary. I'll go and work first. Go to bed early." She had all kinds of reasons to refuse further contact with him.

Aggie did remember something she needed to deal with. She needed to write an application.

Every year, HD Hospital sent a group of doctors abroad for training and academic exchanges in order to keep up with the most advanced medical technology in the world, and the training lasted basically one month. Aggie was one of those doctors this year.

One of the most important reasons she agreed to go out with Tam was this training. She would leave

South City for a month, and she agreed with Tam to date each other for only three months. After she came back from abroad, there would only be two months left. She could just slightly over it.

Tam stared at the phone that was hung up. The days when he couldn't see her, kiss her, and spend time with her were really torturous.

If Aggie kept rejecting him and not giving him hope, he wouldn't be full of hope, but now that she had agreed to go out with him and he became her legitimate boyfriend, he couldn't help but want more.

Speaking of which, Tam had never been in a relationship like this in his life.

What an interesting relationship!

Aggie wrote the application and sent it to Nick by email. Then she fell into a tight sleep.

The next morning, she was woken up by the sound of Elyse knocking on the door. Aggie opened the door with a drowsy look, and then Elyse rushed in with pajamas and a long down coat. Seemed that Elyse hadn't washed up and fixed her hair.

Elyse did just get up. She woke up in the morning and surfed the internet for a while as usual. Then she was shocked by the trending topics online.

Aggie had a habit of turning off the phone before she slept at night. Elyse couldn't get through to her phone and had to come in person.

She asked Aggie nervously, "Aggie, are you sure the photo Tam mentioned when he announced he had a girlfriend was taken by you? Are you sure that the hand he was holding was yours?"

Aggie was confused, "Yes, what's wrong?"

Last night, Tam said he wanted to announce that he had a girlfriend, and because his other hand was injured, he asked her to take the photo of the two of them holding hands.

It was true that she took the picture herself, and it was her hand that was being held.

Elyse said angrily, "You still don't know, right? Now rumor has it that Vanna is Tam's new girlfriend because Vanna posted a photo early in the morning. The tablecloth and the dried flower vase in her photo are exactly the same as those on your dining table last night, and she posted it with a sentence: because of you, even the air is sweet."

Aggie, "..."

Elyse took out her cell phone and showed it to Aggie, "If you are the person who took this photo, then Vanna is just taking advantage of it to hype herself up, deliberately implying that she is Tam's new girlfriend. Oh, my god! What a dirty trick! Shame on her!"

Elyse exclaimed incredulously after analyzing it, and Aggie didn't know what to say. That was really an eye-opener.

She remembered Tam said last night that he couldn't help himself in the entertainment industry sometimes. Just like what happened today, what Vanna had done caught everyone off guard. Even if Tam clarified it, people would not necessarily believe him.

Rumors stop at the wise, but how many people in this world were wise?

In the face of gossip, most people would instinctively choose to believe that those rumors. No one would really analyze the details or see whether it was reasonable. After all, those things didn't happen to them, and they wouldn't bother to think much about it.

They thought it was none of their business.

After a brief glance at Elyse's phone, Aggie returned it to Elyse. She already knew what happened from Elyse, and she didn't need to check it anymore.

After returning the phone to Elyse, Aggie went towards the kitchen, asking Elyse as she walked, "You haven't eaten breakfast yet, right? Do you want to have a bowl of the congee I made?"

Aggie had set the rice cooker to cook porridge the night before, so she could drink it in the morning. With a few slices of baked whole-wheat bread, that would make her breakfast.

Elyse yelled after her, "What? You are really tolerant. You are not going to do anything about it? You are Tam's real girlfriend, and she is stealing your identity!"

Elyse was irritated when she saw this news, and she kept cursing Vanna for being shameless.

Aggie served the porridge while calmly responding to the irritated Elyse, "Is there any need to do anything? A fake is a fake; it can't be real."

Could Vanna become Tam's real girlfriend just by showing a tablecloth and flower of the same style as hers?

She just wanted to get some attention for a while, but she forgot how Tam would deal with her later.

Stupid.

Of course, if Vanna was Tam's confidante, maybe Tam would not take action against her.

Just now Aggie glanced at Elyse's cell phone, and there was a gossip that some time ago Tam had chosen

Vanna to play the lead in a TV series. Rumors had it that there might be something going on between Tam and Vanna.

Seeing Aggie's calm look, Elyse, however, got more anxious.

Elyse didn't know what to say, then she turned to ask Aggie, "Speaking of which, I am still curious. Why did you agree to go out with Tam? I was almost scared to death yesterday when I read the news that Tam had a girlfriend now. Why don't you keep him pursuing you for a few more days?"

Aggie came out with two bowls of porridge and sat down at the table, answering Elyse truthfully, "I agreed to date him for three months. I'm going abroad for academic exchange for a month in a few days, and it will take three months for his arm to recover completely. He won't and can't do anything to me within these three months."

Elyse opened her mouth wide in surprise.

This was really... an eye-opener for her.

They were both so scheming!

Blinking her big beautiful eyes, Elyse asked Aggie in a daze, "So, you don't really want to be with Tam at all?"

Aggie did not deny it.

Elyse collected her shocked expression, "But he is so shrewd. He is able to figure out your purpose, right? Aren't you afraid he'll get angry?"

Aggie smiled, "As you said, he definitely knew my purpose but still accepted it, so we both are kind of willing to accept it."

Elyse didn't know what comments to make. She could only lower her head and take the Mixed Congee Aggie made. Elyse asked for one more bowl after she finished one bowl.

When Aggie went to serve her congee, the doorbell rang.

Elyse went to open the door and saw Tam standing at the door with a gloomy face, followed by Dante.

Elyse quickly closed the door.

Tam, "..."

Dante had experience. With just one glance, he knew that Elyse wasn't wearing underwear.

Elyse rushed to the kitchen and reported to Aggie, "Tam and Dante are here, but I did not wear underwear."

Aggie naturally saw it. She knew that Elyse would not wear a bra at home. And they were both women, so it didn't matter. But now two men came here.

Aggie was a bit confused. Why would Tam come here early in the morning?

Elyse said glumly, "I won't take the porridge. I'll go back."

Aggie also felt that this was the only way out. No one would expect Tam and Dante to come here so early in the morning, and she herself hadn't cleaned up yet.

Aggie went back to the bedroom to change clothes, while Elyse hurriedly put on her thick down jacket.

Elyse reopened the door, smiled, and greeted Tam and Dante. Finally, she looked at Tam and said meaningfully, "What a notorious industry!"

After the sarcasm, she bypassed them and ran away in a hurry.

Hearing Elyse's words, Tam knew that Aggie also knew about the news.

Tam felt upset that Elyse told it to Aggie so fast.

The first thing he did after he found out this happened early in the morning was to call Aggie, but her phone was turned off, so Tam had to come to her house to explain.

Aggie walked over and looked at Tam and Dante, "Come in."

Tam stared closely at her face as if to find out if her emotions were affected by this matter.

Dante didn't come in, "You guys talk. I'll go out and have some breakfast."

Now that Tam and Aggie were already dating each other, it was not appropriate for him to go in.

After the door was closed, Aggie looked at Tam with some confusion, "You came here so early; is there something wrong?"

Tam had strongly mixed feelings, but he still stated his intention directly, "I came to explain the matter of Vanna."

Aggie raised her eyebrows and was a bit surprised. She didn't expect him to come here to explain in such a serious manner.

In other words, she didn't expect Tam to attach such importance to her feelings.

CHAPTER 573 STAY FOR A DATE

Tam opened his mouth to explain, "Vanna is my company's artist, and her career is on the rise recently. I gave her a leading role some time ago just because her looks and acting style fit the role, not because I had any unspeakable relationship with her."

Aggie didn't say anything. She sat back down at the table and began to eat her porridge slowly.

Tam looked at her calm face and frowned slightly, "I am running the business in this circle, and I naturally hope that the artists in my company can become more and more popular. Vanna is a pretty good actress among the young stars, so I chose to promote her. But I didn't expect her to be so stupid. I will directly blacklist her later."

Tam was really annoyed, so he contacted his company's artist director as soon as he learned about this. Without mercy, he told the company to stop all of Vanna's work, including the leading role that he had just given her.

The artist director was dumbfounded, and Vanna's agent cried out loud.

Tam had just established a relationship with Aggie last night, and early this morning Vanna caused trouble for her agent. Her agent was so angry that he even wanted to teach her a good lesson, so he would definitely not save her. Vanna seemed to have underestimated Tam's feelings for his new girlfriend; she thought she could take this chance to hype herself up and that Tam would not care about it. After all, so many female stars had done the same thing before.

Unluckily, she was way out of line this time and was directly blacklisted by Tam's company.

She was too foolish. Everyone could see that Tam valued his girlfriend very much, but she chose to challenge Tam's bottom line. She was courting death.

Aggie was shocked by the word "blacklist". She stopped eating the porridge, raised her eyes to look at him, and slowly said, "In fact, you do not need to explain, and there is no need to be so angry. I am not an innocent little girl, and I won't blame you or quarrel with you for this matter."

"You also said that her career was on the rise recently. You might ruin her life if you did that!" The reason why Aggie talked Tam out of doing that was not that she was merciful. Instead, she felt that there was really no need to be so angry. After listening to Elyse's words, she basically knew what was on Vanna's mind.

Still the same saying, a fake was a fake and it couldn't be real.

Even though she seriously declared that she was not angry, Tam still stood there with pursed lips and a tight jaw, which showed that he was in a bad mood.

She said she was not an innocent little girl, so she would not be angry.

In fact, the real reason was that she had no feelings for him at all, right?

He was already in a bad mood, and now he was in an even worse mood, and his face became appallingly gloomy.

Aggie was a bit puzzled by his increasingly sullen face. She did not want to look into the matter any further, so she got up and took the initiative to ask, "Have you eaten breakfast? Do you want to have some congee?"

Because she took the initiative to speak, and she sounded somewhat concerned about him, Tam's anger eased a little. He walked over, sat down at the table, and nonchalantly responded, "Yes."

Aggie went to the kitchen and got Tam a bowl of porridge, "I'll fry a few slices of bread and eggs."

She always ate little. A bowl of porridge and a few slices of bread were enough for her breakfast. But Tam was a man and also a patient, and that was definitely not enough for him. Aggie remembered there were two sausages in the refrigerator and decided to fry them too.

Looking at Aggie who was walking to the kitchen, Tam felt in a better mood.

It was thoughtful of her to realize that a bowl of porridge was not enough for him.

When Aggie came out of the kitchen, she carried a white delicate plate with bread, fried eggs, and warmed sausages on it. This food, together with a bowl of fragrant congee, would be enough for his breakfast.

"Thank you." Tam now had a smile on his face, and after politely saying thank you, he started eating.

Tam ate elegantly, and Aggie also ate slowly next to him. They hardly spoke during the meal, and judging from that, they seemed to have been well brought up.

During the meal, Tam's phone kept ringing, but Tam ignored it, and then simply turned it off.

Those calls were from Vanna and her agent, and their purpose was obvious.

Vanna had already deleted that post, but it was too late. The gossip and rumors had already spread, and deleting the post would not solve any problem.

Even if Aggie was not angry, even if Aggie told him to be merciful, Tam was not going to let Vanna go.

He could make her famous, and he could also throw her into hell. Vanna only had herself to blame.

After breakfast was almost finished, Tam smiled and asked Aggie, "What are your plans for today?"

Aggie had a bit of a headache.

Last night she could use the excuse of resting early to drive Tam away, but this morning she had just got up and had no reason or excuse to do it again.

She had to answer truthfully, "Nothing. I'll go back to see my father this afternoon and have dinner with him tonight."

Tam demanded nonchalantly, "That means I can stay here in the morning? And also have lunch with you?"

Without waiting for Aggie to say anything, Tam continued to emphasize, "You also know that my current physical condition is not suitable for us to go out on a date. Your home is the best place for a date now."

"Two people in love should date more, so we can learn more about each other," Tam said eloquently.

"Whatever." Aggie could only reply to him like this.

Aggie now felt a bit overwhelmed. She felt she was not a match for Tam because she was not as shameless as him.

As soon as Elyse walked out of the flat where Aggie's house was located, she let out a long sigh of relief.

It was so awkward. It seemed that she had to get dressed up even at home in the future. She lived with some single girls. Usually, no one else would go to her house, except for the delivery, and in that case, they would tidy themselves up before the delivery arrived.

This morning she was too anxious and shocked that she rushed to Aggie's house just with a down jacket and her pajamas. Anyway, the winter down jacket was very thick, and people couldn't see anything under it.

Who knew it would be so embarrassing?

After a few steps, she suddenly heard someone behind her shout, "Stop there."

Elyse got nervous. She pretended not to hear it and instantly sped up her steps forward.

As soon as she heard the voice, she knew it was Dante. She did not want to see Dante. As soon as she saw him, she would think of that day when he saw her naked in her house.

But the man caught up with her after just a few steps. He stood in her way and blocked her with his tall body. He asked her in a dissatisfied tone, "Why are you running?"

Dante was 1.9 meters tall and had very long legs. With just a few steps, he caught up with Elyse.

Elyse had to raise her face and refuted, "No, I am not. I'm just sleepy, and I'm rushing home to take a nap."

Fortunately, her down jacket was thick enough. This time he could not see anything.

Dante took a glance at her face as she guiltily avoided his gaze after she told the lie; he could not help but want to laugh.

She couldn't even tell a good lie!

Instead of continuing to scare her with a fierce face, he turned to invite her kindly, "Do you want to have breakfast? I know a particularly famous bun store. Do you want to have a try?"

After a few contacts, Dante discovered that Elyse was a foodie. As long as there was good food, her eyes would light up.

As expected, Elyse immediately looked at him joyfully, "Buns?"

Although Elyse had a bowl of congee at Aggie's house, she was not full yet.

Yes, she was one of the people who would not gain weight even if she ate a lot, so she never failed to take advantage of this enviable characteristic and she never refused all kinds of food. She wouldn't gain weight anyway, so why not enjoy it?

Over time she became famous for being a foodie in the HD Hospital...

As soon as she heard Dante mention delicious buns, she immediately let all her guard down and couldn't wait to go with him now.

Her joyful look made Dante frown slightly. Why was it so easy to coax her? What if she was tricked by those men with bad intentions?

Elyse looked at the man's frown and asked awkwardly, "What, what's wrong?"

Was it that he didn't want to take her there?

That was annoying!

If he couldn't take her there, he shouldn't have tempted her just now.

When she was about to accuse him, she heard him say, "Nothing. Let's go. You go home and change your clothes first. I'll go drive the car."

Hearing his words, Elyse immediately blushed.

Did he see anything just now?

Dante took a look at her expression and pretended not to know anything, "The place we're going to is a bit far, so it's not appropriate for you to go there with this dress, right?"

Elyse glared at him fiercely and scurried towards her house in a flash.

Dante went to drive his car. Ten minutes later, Elyse went downstairs, and the two went to eat breakfast together.

Before Elyse went downstairs, Dante received a call from Jennie again, but this time Dante did not answer.

Rumor had it that there was something going on between Tam and Jennie, but only a few of them who were familiar with Tam and Jennie knew that it was just Jennie's unrequited love for Tam.

Jennie and Tam were acquainted with each other when they were not famous. After Tam set up the current media company signed, the first artist he signed was Jennie. Jennie used to work as a resident singer in a bar and few people knew her, but she was good at singing.

After Tam signed her, he promoted her at a great cost and Jennie quickly rose to fame. She finally became a first-tier singer after winning several music awards in succession.

However, Jennie was not satisfied with the status quo, and she began to challenge acting.

This was the field that Jennie was good at, but Jennie was hardworking and perseverant. She had won a lot of awards in acting these years and became a successful actress.

Dante knew that Jennie worked so hard just in order to be worthy of Tam.

CHAPTER 574 THE ARRIVAL OF LEON AND HATHAWAY

But Dante didn't tell Jennie that some things were meant to be and that she would never get someone no matter how hard she tried.

Jennie had been obsessed with Tam for years, but Tam had never taken an extra glance at her. Jennie still didn't give up. That was Jennie's own problem.

There was nothing wrong with loving a person, but loving a person who was never likely to respond to her love was wrong.

Outrageously wrong.

He knew what Jennie was calling him for. Tam ignored her, and she stubbornly wanted a reason from him. She was still curious why Tam refused to choose her to be his girlfriend.

Dante felt that perhaps he should talk to Jennie.

After all, Tam was quite attached to Aggie, and one day, Tam might decide to marry Aggie. Dante thought it was better to persuade Jennie to give up before it was too late.

Dante drove Elyse to the bun store he said. Elyse got off the car and stood in front of the store stunned. She did not expect it to be the most famous bun store in South City. She wanted to say she could not afford it...

This was a century-old store in South City, and judging from the long queue outside, this store was quite popular.

After Dante parked his car and walked over, he looked at Elyse who froze in place and didn't move, and said, "Let's go."

Elyse pointed to the long queue, "There are too many people in the line."

She was afraid that she would have fainted from hunger before it was her turn.

Dante explained, "I've booked a seat."

Originally he and Tam wanted to come here for breakfast, but as a result of that incident, Tam went to find Aggie.

After Dante finished his explanation, he saw that Elyse was still not moving, and asked, "What's wrong?"

Elyse was somewhat embarrassed but still said the words, "I did not know we were coming here to eat buns. I think I can't afford to the buns here..."

She was just a small nurse, not a famous doctor like Aggie, and she came from an ordinary family. Such a breakfast was too extravagant for Elyse.

Dante couldn't help but smile, "My treat."

Dante felt that she was quite sincere and quite real. Unlike many vain girls, she knew very well about her economic conditions and also knew what level of consumption her wages could support. She wasn't greedy or money-oriented. Most importantly, she didn't take Dante's treat for granted.

Now many women couldn't satisfy their own vain and greedy wishes on their own, and they turned to get them from men.

"No." Elyse shook her head and firmly refused Dante, "Either I buy it myself, or we change a place, okay?"

Elyse said that last sentence in a whisper. Although it was embarrassing, she didn't want to owe Dante anything.

They were not familiar with each other. She thought it was just a simple breakfast.

Elyse raised her little face again to lecture Dante, "Besides, you're not that rich, right? You shouldn't have such an extravagant breakfast."

Dante, "..."

He asked her with an amused face, "I don't look like a rich person?"

He was at least the boss of a security company, and his security company had the best reputation and was the most popular one in South City. Although its annual profit couldn't be compared with Tam's company, Dante still made much money, and he could afford a luxury car, a villa, and an extravagant life.

It was just that he had always been low-key and simple, and he had been living a simple life in terms of clothing, food, housing, and transportation. Was it because of this that Elyse didn't think he was a rich man?

Dante felt that he needed to wear a luxury watch that worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, just like Tam.

Elyse nodded, "Aren't you Mr. Finger's bodyguard?"

Dante was a bit speechless, but he didn't explain anything more, and instead, he proposed, "Then let's find another place."

Although Dante was a sturdy man, he could read people's minds.

He could see that if he forced Elyse to eat here with him today, she wouldn't be happy.

She would feel the pain if she spent the money herself, and she would feel indebted to him if he treated her, so he proposed to go to a restaurant where she could afford the food.

Elyse breathed a sigh of relief and obediently followed Dante to leave.

She hadn't expected him to be so thoughtful, otherwise, she would have indigestion today. She thought Dante would force her to go in and eat.

The two went to an affordable breakfast restaurant. This time Elyse felt no psychological pressure, and most importantly, no monetary pressure.

When eating breakfast, Dante looked at Elyse's satisfied face, thought about it, and said, "Remember, don't open the door for others if you are at home."

This was what Dante had always wanted to say to her. That day, she dazedly opened the door for him, and this morning she did it again even without asking. If outside the door were those men with bad intentions, she would be in danger.

Elyse didn't care, "Almost no one visits my house. Who knows you will suddenly come here?"

"But you still can't just open the door!" The tone of Dante was a bit serious. He owned a security company and had heard a lot of security cases.

Elyse couldn't stand him. She rolled her eyes and complained, "You are really more nagging than Ms. Garcia."

Dante was a bit confused, "Who is Ms. Garcia?"

Elyse answered angrily, "My mother!"

Dante, "..."

Dante was amused by Elyse's words and had no idea what he should say to her.

After breakfast, Aggie cleaned up the dishes and went to the kitchen. When she came out, she saw Tam standing in front of the bookcase in her living room reading a book there.

His long and elegant figure was still so captivating, although his arm was in a splint.

In terms of appearance and temperament, Tam was a boyfriend that was pleasing to the eye.

There was no TV in Aggie's home. She did not like watching TV; she thought it was an extreme waste of time. Most of her free time was spent reading books, including books of her specialized area.

Her living room was equipped with a bookcase on one wall from floor to ceiling, full of the books she had collected over the years.

The other wall was equipped with a projector so that she could sometimes watch movies or some academic conferences.

After seeing her walk over, Tam smiled at her, "This is the first time I've seen someone's home with all books but no TV."

Aggie smiled, "That means... you should widen my knowledge."

Aggie didn't know about Tam's social network, but she knew some people, such as Professor Macadam, who also had no TV in their houses and had a whole wall of books.

And her father also loved books.

There was a TV in her parents' house, but her father loved the books in the study more.

Perhaps it was because of the influence of her father, she also developed a habit of reading books and loved books so much.

Tam smiled and answered Aggie, "It's true that I should widen my knowledge. I will also throw away my TV and replace it with a bookcase."

Tam said these words when casually shoving the book in his hand back to the bookshelf, and then he approached Aggie, pushed her against the bookshelf, and stared at her beautiful face with narrow eyes. Then he said with a low voice, "Such an atmosphere is not suitable for chatting, but suitable for... kissing. "

The early morning sunlight shone through the glass window in the living room and lightened the bookcase.

It was such a romantic and beautiful scene, a perfect time to kiss.

Aggie somewhat speechlessly raised her hand and pushed him. Who said yesterday that he would give her time to adapt? He wanted to kiss her so much?

Aggie's cell phone rang at this moment and kind of saved her.

But the call was from Dante for Tam, because Tam's phone was off.

Tam took Aggie's phone and answered Dante's call, who said on the other end, "Mr. Davis just called me and said that he and Mrs. Davis are going to visit you in the hospital. Is it convenient for you to go back?"

Tam raised his eyebrows, "Leon and Hathaway?"

Then he looked at Aggie next to him and asked in a low voice, "Leon and Hathaway are going to visit me in the hospital. Do you mind if I ask them to come here?"

After this, Tam added, "Speaking of which, you and Leon have a good relationship. Your news even made the headlines."

Aggie didn't want to respond to his jealous words. She had had coffee with Hathaway once before and thought Hathaway was quite nice, so she lightly responded, "Then let them come over."

It was okay for Leon and Hathaway to know about her relationship with Tam. Aggie believed that they were not the kind of people who would talk about such gossip.

Besides, she didn't want to hide it from everyone. It was okay for trustworthy people to know about it. Who she was wary of were those ill-intentioned villains.

After Tam hung up the phone, Aggie said, "I'll go wash some fruit."

When she was about to turn around, Tam took her hand and sincerely thanked her, "Thank you for helping me entertain my friends."

While saying, he kept holding her hand and stroking it.

Aggie drew back her hand, "You're welcome."

When Aggie walked to the kitchen, Tam said behind her flirtatiously, "When my arm recovers, I will thank you properly."

Aggie directly closed the sliding door of the kitchen. What a shameless man!

That was his excuse. He just wanted to do something to her. She would dump him at that time.

CHAPTER 575 SO CHARMING

At the parking lot in front of the hospital.

Leon was sitting in the car and talking to Dante, holding his phone with one hand while holding Hathaway's hand with the other.

Hathaway felt that he was too clingy, even holding her hand while answering the phone. She was just pregnant. Why did he make a big deal of it?

Hathaway was now five months pregnant and her belly was already pretty big, but her limbs were still very slender.

She had to thank Leon for that. She was worried that she would lose her good figure because of pregnancy and that Leon would lose interest in her. Leon was scared to death by her thoughts and was afraid that she would get depressed during pregnancy, so he hired a pregnancy nutritionist from Nick's hospital with a high salary to prepare her three meals.

Those meals could maintain her nutrition balance during pregnancy and her slim body at the same time. Hathaway was very satisfied with the results, and she didn't have those unconfident thoughts after her body was still well maintained.

Because of the partnership with Tam, Leon thought he should come to visit Tam after Tam was seriously injured.

When Hathaway said she also wanted to come along, Leon was determined not to agree at first. How could a pregnant woman come to the hospital? There were so many germs. What if she got sick and catch a cold?

However, in the end, Leon could not resist Hathaway's persistence, so he could only take her with him, intending to pay a symbolic visit and then leave.

The reason why Hathaway insisted to come was that she was curious about Tam's new girlfriend that Tam announced last night.

According to Tam's previous style, he would expose his girlfriend's identity while announcing his relationship with his new girlfriend, but this time he did so secretly. A smart woman like Hathaway understood instantly that Tam was protecting his girlfriend.

This made Hathaway even more curious. Which girl could make Tam care so much?

Hathaway thought that Leon would know about it, after all, the two of them were partners, and they had met several times recently to talk about their work. Maybe Tam had brought this girl to meet with Leon.

But Leon said seriously that he did not know at all. He said that during this period of time, he had never seen Tam with a woman around, although it was not appropriate for Tam to meet Leon with a woman. Tam knew that Leon hated such things.

Even Leon didn't know who Tam's new girlfriend was, so Hathaway was terribly curious.

Today, Vanna posted a microblog and that became the breaking news. Everyone was saying that Vanna was Tam's new girlfriend, but Hathaway felt that it was not Vanna at all.

If it was Vanna, then why didn't she announce last night when Tam announced it?

Obviously, Tam's new girlfriend was a low-key person who didn't show off, so Vanna was definitely not that woman.

Therefore, Hathaway insisted on following Leon to see Tam today. She wanted to ask Tam who his new girlfriend really was, because Hathaway knew that it was impossible to ask Leon to ask for her.

After Leon hung up the phone, he turned his head to look at Hathaway with a speechless expression.

Hathaway asked him in confusion, "What's wrong? Have you found out which ward Tam is in? Let's hurry up and go."

"Tam is not in the hospital. He asked us to go to his girlfriend's house to see him here." Leon repeated to Hathaway what Dante had just said on the phone.

Hathaway was surprised and excited, "So I don't even need to ask him. I can meet his girlfriend directly?"

Hathaway thought it would be hard to know it from Tam because he was so protective of his new girlfriend, but she didn't expect that she could directly go to his new girlfriend's house.

Hathaway couldn't help but exclaim, "That's so fast. They are already living together."

Hathaway thought that Tam had spent the night at his girlfriend's house last night.

Leon said, "You also know his new girlfriend..."

Leon was a little uncertain, not sure if Hathaway would get angry. Tam's new girlfriend was Aggie. Leon knew that Hathaway had always admired Aggie and she always praised Aggie. Leon felt that if Aggie was a man, Hathaway would have been attracted to Aggie.

Hathaway appreciated Aggie and sincerely treated Aggie as a friend, so she naturally hoped that Aggie could have a sweet love and smooth relationship, but Tam... was not a man who deserved a good girl.

So Leon didn't know what to do. When did Tam hook up with such a psychiatrist? Why would a cold and indifferent woman like Aggie choose to date Tam?

Leon didn't want to care about anything else; he only cared about his beloved woman. He didn't want her woman to get emotional for their thing. After all, it was too ridiculous. And it was not easy for Leon to have a baby at such an age.

Leon thought a lot, while Hathaway was thinking hard with a frown, "I know her?"

Leon sighed and took the initiative to tell her the answer, "It's Aggie."

Hathaway, "..."

For a moment, Hathaway thought she had heard it wrong.

She wished that she really heard it wrong.

"How can that be!" If not for the fact that she was in the car, Hathaway would have jumped up, "How could it be Aggie? Aggie can't get in touch with him, and according to Aggie's nature, she wouldn't fall in love with Tam!"

In Hathaway's eyes, Aggie was much more outstanding than Tam.

Leon knew she would have a fierce reaction, so he grabbed her arm in advance, otherwise, Hathaway might have really jumped up.

"Dante said so on the phone. We'll know if it's true or not when we go there." Leon soothed Hathaway.

Hathaway leaned against the car and took a deep breath, rubbing her chest. Then she said, "I'm going to have a heart attack from this news."

It was unbelievable.

"Hurry up and drive. I want to go and see what's going on." Hathaway urged Leon.

Leon stopped the car, "Aggie lives in the neighborhood next to the hospital. It's very close; let's walk there."

About ten minutes later, the two of them arrived in front of Aggie's house.

Aggie came to open the door, and Tam followed behind her.

After opening the door, Hathaway saw that it was really Aggie standing in front of her and closed her eyes in pain, "At this moment, I really wish I was blind."

Aggie was amused by her and laughed softly, while Tam protested discontentedly, "Mrs. Davis, you really look down upon me?"

Hathaway opened her eyes and unhappily glanced at the handsome man behind Aggie, "Mr. Finger, I didn't look down upon you. You're very good."

"But Aggie is even better and she deserves a better man." Hathaway unceremoniously said to Tam.

"Sorry then. I am so charming that I can even make her fall in love with me with one arm disabled." Tam talked back in a teasing tone. Hathaway was so angry that she wanted to hit him.

He was too proud of himself.

Aggie smiled and welcomed them into the house, "Come on in."

The four of them entered the house. Tam led Leon to the living room, while Hathaway dragged Aggie to the bedroom. Leon frowned behind Hathaway and reminded her, "Move slowly..."

Before he could finish his words, Hathaway had already flashed into the bedroom. Leon was so nervous that his heart almost skipped one beat.

He looked at Tam who was in a happy mood with a discontented expression, "It's all your fault!"

Since Hathaway was pregnant, for the sake of the child in her belly, she was very careful, but today, because of this incident, she completely forgot that she was a pregnant woman.

Leon vented his anger on the culprit, Tam, who showed an innocent expression, "What does it have to do with me if your wife doesn't listen to you? You are not strict enough. I think it is necessary for you to regain your dignity as a husband."

Leon, "..."

What was he talking about? He was not even married and was in no position to criticize his behavior as a husband.

Did Tam know what marriage was all about? What was needed in marriage was tolerance!

Forget it. A playboy like Tam would not understand this.

Leon changed the subject to Tam's injury and his acquisition of Finger Group. Tam carelessly told him what had happened.

Leon had more or less heard of the feud between Tam and his father, but Leon did not expect that Alia would be so vicious and planned to get rid of Tam so as to get the Finger family and Tam's property.

Leon also did not expect that Howard would allow Alia to deal with his son in this way.

Although his father, Merlin Davis, did not care about him either, at least his father would stand by him when he encountered anything and would not play against him.

Leon thought that if he asked for something from his father, his father would give it to him no matter what, but now Howard was still trying to resist Tam's acquisition.

If Howard honestly handed over Finger Group now and Tam successfully completed the acquisition and kicked Alia and her family out, Tam naturally would take care of Howard, but given the situation now, it seemed that Tam wouldn't care about Howard's life at all.

Howard was too foolish in this respect.

If he was not foolish, he would not have done that kind of nasty thing when his wife was not yet dead.

Leon felt somewhat sorry for Tam. Seeing that Tam behaved as if nothing had happened, Leon solemnly spoke, "You will always have Davis Group's support no matter what problems you have, and the Feyrer, Taylor, and Jackson family will also support you."

Once Leon's parents did not get along. Not being cared about by his parents, Leon felt miserable and unfortunate. Now after knowing what happened to Tam, Leon felt his life was not that bad.

"Mr. Davis, I'm grateful for that." Tam smiled, "But for the time being, I don't need your help, and you know my strength."

With his own power, he could destroy Finger Group, and he didn't need the help of others, but he was grateful for Leon's kindness.

CHAPTER 576 WHOEVER IS SERIOUS FIRST LOSES

In the bedroom.

Worried, Hathaway asked Aggie, "Dr. Winn, what's going on between you with Tam?"

Aggie gave Hathaway a hint to let her sit on the couch at the end of the bed, taking good care of the pregnant Hathaway.

Then he chuckled and said, "Hathaway, don't call me Dr. Winn. Just call me Aggie."

Aggie had spoken to Hathaway on the phone in Milan about her handling of the affair with Leon previously. Later, Hathaway asked Aggie out after she came back from Milan. Aggie could feel Hathaway's appreciation for her and her aspiration to make friends with her. In fact, she also liked to hang out with a straightforward and excellent girl like Hathaway.

Aggie was slow to warm to strangers and passive. Hathaway's enthusiasm was a great icebreaker.

She was intimately acquainted with Elyse because Elyse started up a conversation. At that time, Aggie caught the flu in the winter and had a high fever, so she had to have an intravenous drip. Elyse was the nurse who gave her the injection. And later Elyse always came to her and was caring and attentive to her.

Aggie also had to admit that Elyse was also frank and lovely. She still remembered that Elyse said that she was an aloof and noble doctor in HD Hospital and that she had wanted to make friends with Aggie for a long time. So she asked Aggie if Aggie was willing to make friends with her.

Aggie chuckled and said yes. Who wouldn't want to be friends with such a simple, cute nurse?

By asking Hathaway to call her "Aggie" this time, Aggie befriended Hathaway.

Then she told Hathaway how she and Tam met and what happened over the past few days. Hathaway was amused to hear that, "So you agreed to date Tam because you wanted to deal with him?"

Aggie nodded and Hathaway chuckled, "I can assure you it has to be one of the most humiliating moments in Tam's relationships."

Then she sighed, "But Tam is so shrewd. He could not have missed your true purpose, but he chose to accept it."

Hathaway said, looking at Aggie vaguely, "So he's really into you. Are you going to be his last girlfriend?"

"No," Hathaway said cheerfully, but Aggie was annoyed.

She never wanted to marry a playboy and end his messy private life.

Once upon a time, when she still believed in love, she used to fantasize about her other half. He should be like Nick, who was an elegant and charming gentleman, dedicated, loyal, serious, and responsible.

Now, however, all her fantasies had become a bubble.

She didn't expect or believe in love.

Even though Hathaway in front of her in the midst of one of the most beautiful love experiences, she still couldn't get any interest in it.

Hathaway was even more amused at Aggie's rejection of being with Tam, and said to Aggie, smiling, "Don't object him. Maybe you will find that you are really matched for each other after you get along with him."

Hathaway was also an extremely intelligent girl. She could know from Aggie's words that Aggie didn't expect love.

Although Hathaway didn't know the reason, she thought Aggie was such a perfect and excellent girl that deserved to be cherished by men.

Actually, Hathaway didn't think much of Aggie and Tam until Aggie told her about how they met and Tam's obsession with her. Hathaway was even worried that Aggie would be cheated by Tam. But now Hathaway had a foreboding that maybe Tam was the one who would get cheated and then dumped.

In this case, it would be fun and Hathaway wouldn't find Tam so annoying.

Aggie didn't intend to dwell on Tam and herself, so she changed the subject, "By the way, how are Mr.

Taylor and Crystal doing now?"

Crystal had been in therapy at her place, and then suddenly refused to come.

She called once but Kenny answered.

Kenny just said that Crystal was fine now, and thanked her for her help. Besides, according to Kenny, Crystal wouldn't be going to therapy anymore.

Crystal never got in touch with her during this time, so Aggie didn't know what happened to them.

Hathaway sighed, shaking her head, "It got nowhere. They're just getting along as usual."

When it came to this, Hathaway was worried, "Jesus, Kenny is in no hurry. Every time I ask him, he says they are doing well and doesn't allow us to go to Crystal. He's old. Shouldn't he be concerned about his marriage?"

Aggie looked at Hathaway, frowning and sighing, couldn't help laughing, "I met Mr. Taylor several times. Mr. Taylor is steady and very calm as well as responsible and patient. This may be because he is the eldest son and has to take care of two younger sisters. He has got into the habit of dealing with everything on his own. No matter how hard he is, he will not let you know."

Hathaway was startled.

It was the first time she had heard someone say about Kenny like that, but Aggie, as a therapist, must have been accurate.

She remembered that when Kenny was in prison, she went back to him again and again but he never said he was set up by Crystal. None of them even knew about what happened to him and Crystal all these years.

It was exactly what Aggie said. He took all the things on by himself.

Aggie was comforting Hathaway, "Although Mr. Taylor looks gentle, he is very stubborn at the core. So you can rest assured. He's into Crystal, while she's in love with him. They're going to work out."

Hathaway opened her mouth and finally said nothing.

For so many years, she always thought that Kenny was really gentle and easy-going. It was not until Aggie pointed it out at this moment that Hathaway realized that Kenny was really stubborn after thinking about many things since childhood.

But whether Kenny was stubborn or not, he would always be a good elder brother to her and Ashley.

Now that he was with Crystal and Aggie thought they were going to have a happy ending, all the anxiety Hathaway had been feeling these days was gone.

She was successful in her career and had a great relationship. She was pregnant and her life was a bed of roses, so she was concerned about Kenny and Crystal all the time.

Aggie set Hathaway's mind at ease. She somehow trusted Aggie unusually.

They came out of the bedroom and Aggie beckoned Hathaway to sit down on the sofa in the living room and eat some fruit. Tam teased Hathaway with a smile, "Did you speak ill of me again?"

Hathaway laughed, "President Finger, I will definitely support you and Aggie in the future. Look how well you two match. You're an ideal couple and a perfect pair. "

Tam raised his eyebrows. She actually backed him up after chatting.

Tam didn't know Hathaway would just wait and see. Seeing Aggie's attitude towards him, she didn't need to bad-mouth him.

Aggie next to him glanced at Hathaway helplessly. Hathaway was glum about Aggie and Tam being together, but why did she say they were a good match now?

Leon as a lovely husband saw Hathaway come out and started peeling oranges for her.

Hathaway grinned at Tam and said, "By the way, President Finger, you asked me a while ago to style Jennie for the film festival. I called her once and didn't get in touch. I wonder if she was too busy or something."

Tam, "..."

Hathaway spoke things Tam didn't want to hear.

He was pissed off by Vanna, but Hathaway mentioned Jennie. He instinctively looked at Aggie.

There was no change on Aggie's face while she sat there leisurely drinking scented tea.

Hathaway looked at the silent Tam and blinked his beautiful eyes innocently, "Huh? President Finger, you didn't forget that, did you? You told me personally on the phone the other day."

Hathaway made a point of emphasizing the word "personally" to highlight the importance Tam attached to Jennie.

Tam was furious, but he could not vent his anger.

If he did lose his temper, he would really be involved with Jennie.

He was in a partnership with Leon, who just promised him that the Davis Group, the Taylors, the Feyres, and the Jacksons would all have his back. How could he be mad at Hathaway?

It was not like he knew that Leon loved his wife so much. He could lose his temper in front of Leon, but he couldn't be disrespectful to Hathaway.

Besides, Hathaway was still pregnant.

He glared at Hathaway and said nastily, "I've given you her phone number. What's it got to do with me if you couldn't get through?"

He had known Hathaway was picky, and this time he had learned that.

Hathaway said, "Oh. Well, I'll call her a few more times. I thought President Finger would know where she was. Because there are rumors that she is romantically involved with you."

Tam was about to jump up from the couch, grinding his teeth and saying, "I don't have anything to do with her except that she's an artist for my company."

Tam's eyes fell on Aggie as he finished.

She mentioned Belle and Jennie. Tam thought he might be turned out of the door.

He became Aggie's boyfriend just now. If he was dumped, he would be immersed in depression.

Hathaway sees these knee-jerk reactions from Tam. Aggie stayed calm throughout, so it was clear that Tam was now the one who was more enmeshed in love.

Hathaway could not help but chuckle. In the world of relationships, the one who was serious first lost.

It would be a crushing defeat.

CHAPTER 577 LET'S BREAK UP

However, Hathaway didn't feel anything wrong that Tam loved Aggie with all his heart and soul.

She just heard Aggie tell her what happened that night that she met Tam. Hathaway also had seen the world, but she could not guarantee that she handled the big truck as calmly and wisely as Aggie. She could just imagine how impressive Aggie was at that moment.

If Tam wasn't attracted, it would be a big loss for him and he really deserved to be single.

"Let's go." Leon said gently to Hathaway, "So we will let President Finger get on with your dating."

Hathaway stood up with a smile, "Well, we will be the third wheel here."

Tam didn't keep them. He didn't want them to stay any longer, because Hathaway would piss him off.

Aggie and Tam saw them to the door when Leon was holding Hathaway and protecting her in his arms to prevent any accidents from happening to her.

Tam sighed, "President Davis was the coolest man in South City. But now he looks like a different person in front of Hathaway. I can't believe it."

Especially when Leon was talking to Hathaway, he was so gentle, which gave Tam goosebumps.

Tam was not familiar with Leon before, but they met and greeted each other on various occasions. They were both businessmen, so Tam naturally knew Leon didn't indulge himself in lust. But now he became a different person in front of Hathaway...

It was estimated that he didn't dare to disagree with Hathaway.

Hearing his exclamation, Aggie said nothing and went back to the house.

Tam took one look at her calm expression and then suddenly thought of Nick. She was only into guys like Nick. That was why she was not interested in guys like Leon. She didn't even bother to comment along with him.

Tam was jealous and walked over to stop her, "What do you like about Nick? He's not as good as Leon."

At least Leon was in the same commercial circles as him, and he felt he was his equal.

But Tam thought he was much better than Nick.

Nick was a doctor. Leon almost took care of everything in business for Nick, so what was so good about Nick?

Aggie was puzzled why he mentioned Nick again, and his attitude was a critical one. She deliberately gave him a wry look to arouse him, "Different strokes for different folks. It's just your taste."

Tam was about to flare up.

Was she incorrigible?

"You're still missing Nick, aren't you?"

Aggie smiled, "No, I think you are the one who keeps thinking about him."

She didn't say anything about Nick. Buy it was him who was always jealous over and over again, so wasn't he the one who always thought of Nick?

Tam, "..."

Aggie looked at him and smiled, "Tam, I don't think I've ever mentioned your ex-girlfriends since we started dating last night."

Tam pursed his lips.

She didn't even mention Jennie, whom Hathaway had just intentionally mentioned as having an affair with Tam. She didn't even say anything, keeping her equanimity.

Aggie stood there and said, "Think about how many times you mentioned Nick."

Aggie in front of him was standing there, talking to him in a matter-of-fact tone, but Tam just felt that she was not calm at all so that he was too nervous to say a word.

"If you are going to continue with this attitude with me in the next three months, then I don't think we are suitable for each other, so why don't we just break up now?" With that, Aggie turned and went into her bedroom and locked the door.

Tam was left alone outside and felt shocked after being told that she might end their relationship. Then he was in a panic when he realized she was really angry, and later he became annoyed when he was aware that he got dumped.

In short, he had complicated feelings beyond words.

But he couldn't retort upon her. After all, it was true that Aggie had done nothing wrong.

Instead, he kept talking about Nick and making a fuss over it.

Tam, who originally wanted to come on a date, ended up lying alone in the living room, reflecting on himself for most of the morning.

And Aggie in the house was composed, not talking to him and coming out again.

Aggie didn't say it out of anger or impulse. She really felt that it was a waste of time for both of them to be in this relationship.

Over and over again, Tam made a fuss about the fact that she had a crush on Nick. She could understand when he was really jealous at the beginning, but now she just felt that Tam was unreasonable.

Most importantly, he got Nick involved over and over again. It would be embarrassing if it ever got back to Nick or Ashley. After all, Nick married Ashley and they were in love. Tam had been holding on to it, which was not good for all four of them.

After reflecting for most of the morning and calming down, Tam got up and went to Aggie's bedroom, and knocked on the door. But she didn't answer him at all.

Tam apologized sincerely, "I'm sorry. It's my fault."

"I was wrong. I shouldn't be so mean to keep mentioning Nick."

"Don't be angry, and we won't part. I swear I'll never talk about it again."

"Give me another chance, will you?"

Tam kept his temper. He had never been that humble in front of a woman in all his life.

Aggie never responded. He couldn't help but wonder if he was going to be dumped overnight.

Thinking about this, he suddenly felt that life was boring.

And just as he was worried, the bedroom door opened.

Tam was nervous and started to say something more when Aggie said to him indifferently, "I forgive you."

Tam, "..."

Did she really forgive him so easily?

As far as he knew, it was hard to butter women up when they got angry. He just thought of many kinds of ways to be forgiven, aiming at still being her boyfriend.

Aggie walked past him to get herself a drink of water and said calmly, "Just remember what you said."

She was not talkative and always kept her word. She was as good as her, so she wasn't going to get angry with Tam after he just promised. If he went back on his word, she would say that to refute him.

Tam stared at her beautiful, delicate profile and whispered, "Okay..."

A few simple words were enough for him to understand her personality.

She disliked rhetoric and was a real doer.

Therefore, he really needed to restrain and be careful. No matter how jealous he was about Nick, he couldn't talk about it anymore. Otherwise, she wouldn't give him a second chance.

For the first time in his life, Tam felt that even a quiet woman was horrendous.

But then he smiled relaxedly and walked over to stand next to Aggie, close to her, "Now that we're back together, shouldn't we have a hug?"

Aggie, "..."

He was cheeky.

No sooner had she forgiven him than he had the nerve to ask for a hug.

But she did not come to her senses, she was hugged into his arms. He was so thick-skinned beyond imagination.

Aggie didn't struggle in consideration of his injured arm and allowed him to hold her for a while until the doorbell rang.

Tam finally let her go, Aggie was relieved.

If he continued to hold her, she would bake. The house was warmly heated, and when she held Tam's hot body, her forehead was sweating.

She went to the door and opened it. It was Dante outside the door, holding a box with delicate packaging. Aggie glanced at the striking LOGO and said nothing.

It was the most famous brand of luxury jewelry at home and abroad.

Tam walked over, reached for the box, and thanked Dante, "Thanks, Dante."

Dante said nothing and turned to leave.

After closing the door, Tam handed the box to Aggie gently, "For you."

It was a necklace. Tam asked Dante to buy it not because Aggie was angry with him just now. But Tam found Aggie didn't wear any jewelry on her neck and her fair skin was exposed when they had a video call last night.

He thought it would be better for a girl to wear a necklace, so he asked Dante to buy it at that time.

He had chosen the necklace himself and thought it would flatter her fair skin and make her look more charming.

Just then she was angry, so he asked Dante to deliver it to make her happy.

But Aggie didn't look happy at all. She frowned and refused it, "Thanks, but I'm not used to wearing jewelry. It's a waste of money to put something so expensive on the shelf."

Aggie was telling the truth. Personally, she didn't like jewelry. She didn't wear anything extra except a wristwatch that she used to tell the time at work.

Tam was adamant, shoving the box into her hand and saying, "It's a token of our regard. What you want to do with that is your business."

Aggie was helpless, "Are you sure I'm going to handle this by myself?"

Tam nodded. Aggie thought and then said, "Then I will sell it and donate the money to those autistic children in your name. Is that OK with you?"

Tam was stunned. He had no idea she would do this.

Tam was not upset but was indescribably touched.

CHAPTER 578 A MOTHER AND HER DAUGHTER

Aggie explained softly, "As a psychologist, I care a lot about autistic children and have been involved in various activities to help them. If you really want to give me the gift, that will be acceptable to me."

Aggie could understand how Tam felt when he gave her the gift as her boyfriend. It was normal for couples to give gifts to each other. But she thought it was better to give something less expensive, or something that fit her.

She never wore jewelry, but he gave her a necklace, which was so expensive. It was such a waste of money to put it on the shelf, so she had made such an offer.

Tam nodded heartily, "Okay."

But he looked at Aggie affectionately, appreciating and admiring her.

In fact, he had admired Aggie since the night of the big truck accident, or he wouldn't have chased her.

But as he got to know her more, Tam felt that those women who only wanted money, power, and wealth were really vulgar.

He had flirted with those who were mean and narrow-minded.

"Thank you for the children." Aggie accepted the gift calmly after he agreed with that.

Tam suggested, "Since I gave this gift to you, you should donate in your name. I will donate another sum in my own name."

Aggie was stunned for a moment, then smiled and shook her head, "No, our organization is in the cart."

"It's not a matter of money, but the gift for the kids." Tam insisted, "I didn't know about these organizations before, so now that I know about them, I should help. After all, I'm rich."

Aggie was amused by his words, "If that's the case, I suggest you donate in the name of your company. It's good for the reputation of your company."

Actively sponsoring public welfare was a positive thing for an enterprise, and it would be high-end, and classy for the publicity.

And Aggie instinctively felt that Tam, who was usually so high profile, should want the honor.

But Tam shook his head and said, "No. It's rare to give a gift to children, so don't let the outside world know about it."

Children with autism have been looked at differently by many people. If the media knew that Finger Group got involved in it, many of them would cover the group of autistic children, which was not only disturbing but also harmful to children.

"Okay." Aggie did not expect that Tam would be so considerate for the children, but her opinion of him has changed.

It turned out that he also did not fish for fame and credit.

"What would you like for lunch?" After that, it was already noon. Aggie turned to ask Tam.

Tam smiled gently, "Whatever. I love any meal you make."

Tam said such sweet words with ease. Aggie looked at him and turned to get her coat, "There is no food at home. I will go to buy some."

Tam wants to go grocery shopping with her, but considering that both his career and his relationship were in the teeth of the storm, he had to give up the idea.

There were comprehensive free markets of agricultural products in the community, so Aggie could buy fresh dishes without having to go far from home.

Before going out, Aggie told Tam that she would be back in about 20 minutes, but Tam didn't see her after waiting for half an hour.

He couldn't stand that Aggie was out of his sight for a while. He quickly dialed Aggie's number, and Aggie replied on the phone that she would be home soon.

Aggie didn't go back on her word. She hung up and came back a few minutes later.

"I met Dr. Cooper at the market." She explained, "He consulted with me about something and I was delayed."

When Tam heard about Markus, he was angry. This time, of course, he was angry with Markus, not Aggie. Aggie wasn't into Markus while Markus carried a torch for her.

However, having learned from the quarrel about Nick before, he didn't want to be too obviously jealous this time, so he just said it as if nothing had happened, "I think he was pegging you to talk in the name of asking you about something?"

Aggie looked at him and, unusually, did not contradict him.

Because Markus did make excuses to chat with her. She was not good at lying, so let Tam say so.

When Tam saw that she did not contradict him, he became more convinced that Markus was up to no good and despised Markus in his heart.

After Aggie went into the kitchen, Tam saw the ingredients she took out. He coughed and asked softly, "Did you buy... pork knuckle?"

Tam wanted to say he hated it, but since Aggie bought it, he couldn't say that.

In other words, he had to put up with it even though he hated it.

Aggie did not see something wrong with him, and bowed her head to sort out the ingredients in her hands, casually replying to him, "Yeah, it's nutritious, right?"

Tam took one look at his injured arm and was speechless.

Well, well, he couldn't afford to waste her thoughtfulness as she took his injury into consideration.

At noon Aggie stewed a soybean soup with pork knuckle and then made two vegetable dishes. It was enough for them both.

Tam suppressed his disgust and drank a bowl of soup. Unexpectedly, it tasted good, so he asked for another bowl.

He thought it was delicious, wondering whether it was because Aggie was an excellent cook because it was made by Aggie. Anyway, he enjoyed the lunch very much.

After lunch, Aggie asked Tam to leave. Tam wanted to stay, but Aggie refused, "I want a nap."

"I need a nap, too. We can sleep together." Tam leaned against the door and didn't want to leave, looking so cheeky.

Aggie pushed him straight out and closed the door.

Having left him here all morning, Aggie who was stared at by him lovingly ran out of her patience.

Tam reluctantly walked away, but after a few steps, he turned back and knocked on the door. Aggie came out and opened the door for him.

He looked at her with her deep feelings and whispered, "I'll pick you up tonight and meet you at your father's door."

Aggie froze for a moment because of the mixed emotions in his eyes, then quickly looked away, "No, I'll drive there by myself."

She could see that he was heartbroken.

Tam did not force her. He nodded and walked away.

After taking a nap, Aggie cleaned herself up and went back to her home before dinner. It was a very elegant villa located in the villa area of the old town of South City.

A servant came and opened the door to her, and in the drawing-room sat a very richly dressed woman, looking young, with beautiful makeup, and delicate features, who looked rosier than Aggie.

The woman's name was Moira Yonng, Aggie's mother. Moira was the mistress of this house, but she looked like a guest from her dress to her posture.

Moira was indeed a guest. She had moved out of the house for years and would only show up every Sunday when Aggie came home for dinner.

Aggie came over after changing her shoes, looking pale and calling out, "Mom..."

Moira didn't even look at her but greeted her coldly with a sneer.

Aggie seemed to have gotten used to Moira's coolness and... endless resentment and turned to the kitchen expressionlessly.

"Aggie's back." Before she could reach the kitchen, a soft male voice sounded, and her father, Maynard, came from the kitchen pushing the wheelchair. Unlike Moira's indifference, Maynard looked kind.

A smile finally broke across Aggie's face as she stepped over and pushed Maynard's wheelchair from behind, "Dad, didn't I tell you not bustle about in the kitchen?"

"You don't come back very often." Maynard said lovingly, "I can cook you something nice once a week."

They came to the living room as they spoke. Moira and they looked at each other. But the atmosphere was weird.

The dinner was not ready. Maynard cooked a few dishes himself, and the rest of the cooks were busy.

Aggie sat down on the couch and looked at Maynard, "Dad, I went to the suburbs the other day. I have friends who live there. I think the air and environment there are very good. Do you want to consider going there for your health?"

Aggie finished and heard Moira sneer before Maynard said anything, "Go to the suburbs?"

"What about your father's company? And what about the dividends and compensation promised to me?" Moira's tone was sharp as she was mocking.

Aggie argued back with the same sharp words, "Dad has given you enough money these years to live comfortably for the rest of your life, right? Oh no, it's enough to feed you, your lover, and the bastard for the rest of your life. How much longer do you want Daddy to work?"

Moira jumped up off the couch, pointed at Aggie, and snapped, "Is that how you talk to your mother?"

Aggie scoffed, "Mother? Are you good enough to be my mother?"

Tension rose between them after they quarreled a few words, and Maynard, who was completely calm, glanced at the gorgeous woman and said, "Moira, you can go."

Moira sneered, "I'm leaving. Do you think I want to come here? I wouldn't even talk to you if it weren't for the money."

The beautiful woman finished, carrying her expensive limited-edition handbag, and left without looking back.

CHAPTER 579 ELEGANT AND CHARMING

When the sound of the heels died away, Aggie, who had been sullen, slumped on the couch, covered her face with her hands and apologized bitterly to Maynard, "I'm sorry, Dad, I'm sorry..."

It was all her fault.

Everything was her fault.

There was a time when she had a warm and happy family, and Maynard and Moira were affectionate.

The Winn family was eminent in South City. Maynard ran the family company while Moira was a noblewoman who took care of her husband and daughter. Aggie lived a luxurious life and received elite education since her childhood.

When Aggie was fourteen, Maynard was hit by a car accident while out on the way.

The accident was terrible. Maynard was saved, but his body was ruined, and doctors said he would be confined to a wheelchair for the rest of his life.

Aggie was young and knew nothing about romance. She only knew that her father's life was saved, so her life wouldn't be like hell.

She naively assumed that her mother, Moira, felt the same way.

But then one rainy night, all her innocence was gone.

When Maynard left the hospital with a serious injury, Aggie was acutely aware that something was not right with her parents. But she thought it was because the family had just gone through such a big shock that neither of them was getting over it.

On that torrential night, she heard her parents quarreling violently in the study. She approached it quietly and peeped in through the open door.

But she saw her father in the wheelchair holding her angry mother, crying bitterly and pleading, "Moira, I beg you, please don't divorce me. If we divorced, what about our daughter? She's not going to take the blow."

"And I can't live without you. You know how much I love you after all the years we've been married." Maynard finished, holding Moira and crying out of control.

Aggie, who lived with her father for 14 years, had never seen him so upset, nor had she ever seen him cry so fiercely.

It was as if she could relate, and the tears fell down uncontrollably.

Divorce exploded like a thunderbolt in front of her eyes, and she was panic-stricken.

Moira ignored Maynard's pleas and cries, shoving him out of her arms and screaming angrily, "What can you give me now but money? Why don't you let me go!"

Maynard tried to say more, but Moira sputtered, "I'm so young. Do you want me to spend my life with you as a widow?"

Maynard turned pale, pressed his lips, and never said another word.

Aggie didn't understand what Moira was saying. All she saw were tears streaming down Maynard's face, and she knew that her father acquiesced to Moira's request for divorce.

Aggie couldn't accept that.

She felt a cold sweat as she thought about how her classmates, whose parents had divorced, had been ridiculed behind their backs. She also felt that Maynard had been dumped. He was such a good man. Now his body was destroyed. Why did Moira abandon him?

She was young and impulsive. She ran into the study, knelt in front of Moira, and told Moira not to divorce Maynard.

She even angrily asked Moira why she abandoned Maynard when he was so miserable.

Aggie's view on love and marriage is deeply influenced by her parents, but they destroyed it. To be exact, it was destroyed by Moira.

Young Aggie thought that she would have to find a husband like Maynard who doted on Moira.

She also believed that if she loved someone, she should be able to stay with him through weal and woe, just like the wedding vows she saw in many TV dramas: to stay with him no matter for richer or poorer, in health or in sickness.

When Maynard suffered such a blow, Moira asked for a divorce and abandoned Maynard, Aggie found Moira cruel, heartless, and impersonal.

The argument that night ended with Moira slapping Maynard and rushing out of the study.

Later, Maynard and Moira did not divorce. Moira hated staying at home but stayed out all night frequently.

Aggie and Moira's relationship also hit a new low immediately. Aggie could feel it. Moira was full of resentment towards Aggie, and Aggie was also extremely disappointed with Moira.

After calming down, she sobbed and apologized to Maynard for being too selfish to stand in the way of his divorce, telling Maynard to divorce if he wanted, regardless of her feelings.

Maynard stroked her hair and told her that he and Moira were in a good relationship, that their conflict was over. Besides, they would never divorce and kept her a complete home.

Aggie didn't believe Maynard. She had seen them at their most loving. Now that Moira didn't come home all day, the conflict was still there and getting worse.

She followed Moira to Moira's new home. What she saw and heard in her new residence was a nightmare for her whole life.

At that place, Aggie learned that Moira had an affair. It was a younger man, many years younger than Moira. When she thought of her father Maynard, who was defined in a wheelchair at home, she went mad and smashed Moira's place to pieces.

And because she had done such a crazy thing, Moira snapped and told her the truth.

Moira snarled at Aggie, saying that if it weren't for the money, she would have divorced Maynard.

Aggie learned that Maynard had promised to give Moira half of the company's profits each year to keep her from divorcing him.

And Aggie knew that Maynard's compromise was purely for her sake, to keep her home intact.

She didn't know how she got home that day. She was in a daze.

When she returned, she burned for three days and nights, and Maynard took care of her by her bed.

When she recovered, she talked with Maynard seriously. She told him that she didn't need such a family, that Maynard didn't need to pay so much for her. She wanted Maynard to divorce Moira immediately, but Maynard told her that there was no going back.

In order to prevent Moira from divorcing, he drafted a document with extremely unfavorable conditions for her, promising that he would always compensate her as long as she did not divorce. Moira, on the other hand, didn't want a divorce for the money. Because of the limitations of that document, he could not ask for a divorce.

So this was going on up to now.

Maynard was the one who hurt the most, but over the years he was the one who got over it first. Even Maynard had been trying to reconcile her tense relationship with Moira.

Maynard told her that Moira was her own mother anyway and that she shouldn't have gotten into such a mess with Moira.

But in Aggie's eyes, Moira was unworthy of being her mother from the moment she abandoned Maynard.

But in order not to embarrass Maynard, she also reluctantly made peace with Moira.

The only reason she was so sarcastic about Moira today was that she felt so distressed for Maynard.

Maynard retired. As for the Winns company, Aggie was not interested in taking over but more willing to let Maynard sell the company so that Maynard wasn't required to give money to Moira.

In previous years, Moira had a son with her lover, who had been living off Maynard's money for years without a real job while she was more greedy. Aggie felt angry and disappointed for Maynard.

Maynard, on the other hand, seemed to be okay with it. He said that money would come and go. It was also because of his accident that Moira became like this, which meant that he indirectly ruined Moira's life, and he was willing to compensate her.

Aggie wanted Maynard to retire and to get out of the mess. But as soon as Moira came, she asked for money. No matter how calm she was, she couldn't control herself, so she quarreled with Moira.

Maynard pushed the wheelchair over to her and stroked her hair, "There's nothing to be sorry about. I know you're heartbroken for me."

Aggie was close to tears.

Only in front of Maynard would she stop pretending to be tough and indifferent.

And thanks to Maynard, who stood by her side after the family turmoil, warmed, and loved her, she didn't go astray.

If Maynard were as selfish as Moira, she would never be who she was today.

Trying to hold back the tears, she looked up at Maynard again, "Dad, the air is really good out there. You might want to think about moving there."

It was not as bad here.

She persuaded Maynard, "I know you are not giving up your company and want to save more money for me. You always think of me, but I'm worried about you."

Aggie wanted Maynard to enjoy his old age early and comfortably. His life had been hard to be a Moira because of a car accident and Moira. Now she also had a nice job, which could make her live a good life.

"Well, I'll think about your suggestion." Maynard looked down at his expectant daughter and did not cast a damp over her.

After all these years, he no longer cared about his company or marriage. He couldn't worry about anything but his daughter.

She was his darling. He can't let her be hurt.

CHAPTER 580 SPEND THE NIGHT AT HER HOUSE

Aggie was relieved to hear that Maynard would consider her proposal.

Maynard rubbed her hair lovingly and sighed, "Dad won't retire until you found a man you like and settle down."

Aggie's marriage was now uppermost in Maynard's heart.

If there was a strong, reliable man to protect Aggie, Maynard would retire long ago.

Maynard knew, however, that the failure of his marriage to Moira left an indelible shadow on Aggie's mind. She would not dare to be in a relationship, nor would she trust any man. Maynard was distressed and anxious about his daughter's marriage, but there was nothing he could do.

Had it not been for such an opportunity today, he would not have been able to say that.

In fact, a long time ago, Maynard heard that Aggie had a crush on Nick, the low-key, outstanding young man in South City. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson loved each other so much and had great personalities. Maynard was pleased with Nick and his family. He would be relieved if Aggie was with Nick.

However, he secretly inquired that Nick had no feelings for Aggie.

He wanted to fix her up with Nick but gave up this idea when he realized Nick showed little interest in her.

As a father, Maynard didn't want his daughter to be in a passive position in a relationship. Aggie had trouble with entering into romantic relations, and if she chased Nick, things would eventually go wrong.

Besides, Aggie was reserved. If a man persevered in pursuing her, she might be moved and those shadows in her heart would be dissipated.

Obviously, Aggie did not expect her father to urge her to marry, so she looked at him blankly.

Tam's face flashed back to her mind, but in the end, she said nothing about herself and Tam.

After all, her attitude toward Tam was perfunctory. She wanted to break up with him in three months, so there was no need for Maynard to know about it.

Besides, Tam didn't want to marry her.

Of course, Maynard didn't want to.

Maynard and Aggie had dinner together and the atmosphere was very cordial.

Aggie loved Maynard since she was a kid, so Aggie loved Maynard as well. Now that they went through so many sufferings together that they depended on each other, and the bond between them grew stronger.

After dinner, Aggie played chess with Maynard for a while, and at about nine o'clock Maynard urged Aggie to go back early.

Aggie wanted to live at home so she could be with Maynard every day, but Maynard refused because she now lived close to the hospital so she could get more sleep in the morning without commuting to work in a hurry.

Maynard didn't want Aggie back. He was afraid that she would have more problems with it living in the familiar environment every day.

They had been living here since he got married to Moira. Many of the decorations were still made by Moira but he didn't care anymore. He was afraid that Aggie would feel uncomfortable when she saw these, so he simply asked Aggie to live outside alone.

Aggie also knew that her father was in poor health and went to bed early every day, so she didn't stay much longer.

As Maynard walked her to the door, he hesitated, "Aggie, I have a suggestion. If you are looking for a boyfriend, you should not consider a man whose experience is too simple and who suffered no setbacks."

Maynard said earnestly, looking at Aggie, "Because they are too ordinary to bear your secret."

After a man and a woman married and became intimate, the man would know what she encountered. If he was too simple, he would be scared away by her secret.

These men might even laugh at her and despise her because she had such a mother.

More seriously, they might also think that Aggie was like her mother because she had such a mother. If that happened, Maynard might strangle the man, because he knew how good Aggie was.

Maynard had nothing against Aggie finding a man with complex experience, and the more complicated the better. Because only by going through ups and downs, he would be strong enough, and in the eyes of those who had gone through thick and thin, Aggie's experience was nothing at all.

After listening to her father's earnest advice, Aggie was close to tears again.

She nodded, "I remember what you said, Dad."

In that case, Markus, her suitor, was ruled out.

Markus was born in an ordinary family and relied on his hard work to achieve where he was today. Both his family background and personal experience were as simple as they could be.

He really couldn't face her secret.

Aggie thought of Tam again and knew all about Tam these days.

She could not help but laugh at herself. They were really "matched".

When she drove back to her apartment, Aggie was in a bad mood.

Every time she met Moira, she would be upset. Although Moira was her mother, they were practically incompatible.

After Moira had another child, she became even more vitriol toward Aggie. Other families got along well with each other, but Aggie and her mother hated each other to the bone.

The best example of a harmonious family around her was Elyse. Elyse's parents lived in the neighborhood of South City, and they were a doctor and a nurse. Elyse always called her mother Ms. Garcia. When Aggie heard Elyse and her mother make phone calls or have video chats, she was very envious that they were very intimate.

Although Elyse always made fun of Ms. Garcia, she could not hide her happiness when she talked about it.

A more vivid example was Hathaway and Cynthia, who was such a low-key person. But when Cynthia showed up in front of the public occasionally, she was either talking about clothes or Hathaway lovingly. She was also proud that she had a wonderful daughter like Hathaway.

But what about Aggie?

She was extremely outstanding among the girls. She graduated from a world-renowned university and worked in a famous hospital in South City, but in Moira's eyes, she was evil.

Moira could despise her with a mocking look without cursing her.

When parking a car downstairs, a man got off the car not far away.

Tam looked elegant under the blackness of the night.

Aggie looked at Tam walking towards her, stunned.

She remembered the mixed feelings on his face when he left during the day. He was worried about her.

When she was still bemused, Tam came to her. His uninjured hand reached out and took her cold hand.

"Back? As Tam spoke, a pair of sharp eyes were staring at her, probing how she felt calmly.

Aggie glanced down at their clasped hands and asked him in a low voice, "Why are you here?"

"I'm worried about you." Tam didn't hide his feelings, "I wanted to go to your father's house to pick you up, but I gave up the idea for fear of being seen by your father."

Tam was really worried about Aggie.

Now that he investigated her, he knew what her family went through and that she had a bad relationship with Moira.

That was why he said they were kind of in the same boat.

He had a scum father and she had a cruel mother. They were both unhappy.

It was said that people were evil, but no one could believe that there would be such a wicked father and mother if he didn't experience it personally.

No one knew how desperate and sad it was to be hurt and vilified by those closest to you.

Fortunately, Tam knew this feeling, so he felt more distressed for Aggie.

"Thanks for your concern..." Aggie murmured with mixed feelings.

No one around her knew what she was going through, so there was no one to comfort her at such a time.

Because of her parent's divorce, and her worsening relationship with Moira, Maynard sent her directly to college abroad after the university entrance exam. Later, she continued to study abroad and only returned to South City two years ago. These years, she didn't get in touch with those people from noble families in South City and stopped contacting her former classmates and friends.

She kept a low profile since returning, never appearing in public in the name of Maynard's daughter.

What she did most now was going to work and helping autistic children.

Elyse was the first friend she made after returning to the country. However, because Elyse's life was so simple and her family was so warm, Aggie never told her about her family. She was afraid of depriving Elyse's innocence. So Elyse thought that Aggie came from an ordinary family.

Nick came from a noble family in South City like Aggie, so of course, he knew whose daughter she was, and he must also be aware that she had a mother like that.

But even if Nick knew her secret, he wouldn't comfort her cause he didn't have to do this. He kept a distance from her because he had nothing to do with her.

Now that Tam cared about her and felt sorry for her, Aggie felt it strange.

Aggie didn't say anything. Tam held her hand and walked away, "I've been waiting for you most of the night. Do you mind taking me in for the night?"

Aggie, "..."

Was Tam going to spend the night at her house?