CHAPTER 701 TAM BRINGS HIS SENIOR LEADERSHIP GROUP TO AGGIE'S EVENT.

Leon muttered out what was on his mind, while Hathaway acted as if she heard a big joke, leaned over to cup his handsome face, and asking him amusedly, "Leon, do you think you know how to manage our relationship?"

Seeing Leon's reaction, Hathaway laughed, "Isn't it because of me that we are an affectionate couple today?"

Hathaway stretched out her white fingers and counted them one by one. "I took the initiative to pursue you and say sweet words every day to please you. Every time you got angry, I coaxed you. Did you said you know how to run a romantic relationship?"

Leon wrapped his arm around her and kissed her finger gently, "So that's who you think I am?"

Hathaway nodded vigorously, "Yes. You can let our friends evaluate you and see if you are such a person."

Hathaway thought Leon would get angry and argue for himself. To her surprise, he just embraced her with one hand after a chuckle and gently caressed her belly with the other. It was their baby there. What he had now made him feel at ease and content, so how could he try to defend himself? Why should he ask others to evaluate him?

He embraced Hathaway and said, "I don't know how to run a romantic relationship, but I've gotten your sincere love for me. That's my ability, isn't it?"

Hathaway rolled her eyes at Leon.

She was amused by Leon's arrogant words and reached out to poke him on the chest. "You are right, charming man."

After Hathaway finished speaking, both of them laughed out loud.

Then Leon embraced Hathaway and sighed, "Hathaway, after this baby is born, let's not have a second child within a few years, okay?"

Hathaway asked in confusion, "Why? Don't women recover faster the earlier they have children? I plan to give you two children in three years at this young age."

Hathaway didn't have a hard pregnancy this time, so she wanted to have more children.

Hathaway thought that humans were strange. When she wasn't pregnant, she was worried that something bad would happen during her pregnancy, but after she got pregnant, she was relieved and even wanted to have a second child.

"No!" Leon protested with a straight face.

Then he hugged Hathaway tightly and sighed, "Let's take a break. It's too torturous."

Because of Hathaway's pregnancy, they had to restrain themselves in their sexual life. For a man of Leon's age, it was a torturous thing.

In the middle stage of pregnancy, they could have a proper sex life. Because Leon was too worried and care about the baby, he didn't dare to act rashly for fear that he might hurt Hathaway and their baby in case he didn't control himself well. Hence, he had been trying not to think about that.

In this way, compared to other pregnant couples, Leon was in a more tortured life.

That was why he proposed not to have a second child for the time being. Moreover, he hadn't spent too much time with Hathaway alone.

At the sight of his expression, Hathaway knew what he was bothering about and wrapped her arms around his neck with a giggle, "When do you want to have a second child?"

Leon said without even thinking, "Five years. Let's not have a second baby within five years."

He wanted to enjoy life with Hathaway.

Hathaway did some calculations. "Five years? I'll be thirty years old. I seem to be young by then. Well, let's have a second child after five years."

After saying that, she suddenly showed a sly look and whispered in Leon's ear naughtily, "You will be forty years old. Will you still have the strength to have another child?"

Hathaway's words were a deliberate provocation and molestation to Leon. As expected, Leon's face darkened, and he said through gritted teeth, "You'll know whether I have the strength or not."

Hathaway lay on his shoulder, tilted her head, and whispered, "Let me know it now, okay?"

Hathaway exhaled in his ear on purpose and aroused Leon's desire.

Because he cared about the baby in her belly, he took a deep breath and suppressed it.

But the next second, Hathaway kissed Leon on the lips, and her charming breath broke through his last defenses of reason. He picked her up and turned to their bedroom.

After that, Hathaway lay on the bed lazily and thought, "She even needs to take the initiative in such intimate things. Did Leon have the nerve to say that he knows how to run a romantic relationship?"

In the opera house, Aggie and Tam stood up as soon as the long concert was over.

Aggie wrapped her down jacket tightly and walked out, while Tam followed her behind and pulled her into the lounge.

Aggie asked with puzzlement, "What are you doing?"

Tam's eyes fell on the collar of her cheongsam, but he said, "It's crowded now. Let's leave later."

Last time Tam sent Aggie clothes and then broke up with her the next day, so he didn't have time to see what she looked like on it.

Today he just took a quick look and didn't feast his eyes on it.

Tam wanted to pull Aggie in for a look, but she wrapped herself up so quickly.

He was regretful and glad that she put on her down jacket. Otherwise, he would be insomnia tonight.

They didn't leave until the crowd had cleared away.

To be honest, Tam was satisfied tonight for touching her waist, holding her hand, and seeing her in such beautiful clothes.

So he didn't do anything to Aggie in the lounge. When they walked outside and said goodbye, Tam reminded Aggie "kindly", "I helped you entertain Bob, so you owe me a favor. When are you going to pay me back?"

Aggie gave him a fierce glare and got into her car.

She thought about it and was still depressed, so she rolled down her car window and responded when her car passed by Tam, "It's up to my mood."

The implication was that he shouldn't focus on it anymore.

Then Aggie rolled up her car window and drove away.

Tam looked at her car and chuckled.

Alfred, who came to pick up Tam, said jokingly, "Dr. Winn is getting cuter."

When he first came into contact with Aggie, he thought she was a cold and bored woman. Later on, with more contact with Aggie, Alfred realized that she was a short-spoken but kind-hearted girl, so much so that he now dared to joke about Aggie's cuteness.

It was said that a good romantic relationship would make the two people better.

Alfred thought that Tam and Aggie had such love. Aggie had become more vivid and lively, while Tam had become happier.

It was a genuine smile, not a business-like one.

Bob was a psychiatrist, so Aggie invited Bob to her autism foundation event. As they were having a hot discussion about a certain point of view, one staff suddenly informed Aggie that Tam had arrived.

Upon hearing this, Bob snatched his head and shouted in frustration, "Why do I always run into Tam?"

Aggie was a little surprised. Before they broke up, she once mentioned this event to Tam and sincerely invited him to participate at that time.

After their breakup, she didn't mention it again and thought that Tam wouldn't come over. Unexpectedly, he appeared here with several people.

She knew one of them. It was Dante.

Aggie ushered Tam and his companions into the meeting room. After that, Tam introduced her one by one and first pointed to Dante. "You should know Dante. He's in charge of Finger Entertainment's security."

Then he pointed to the only woman in the group and introduced, "This is Tina, the PR director of Finger Entertainment and my special assistant."

Tina nodded at Aggie politely, and Aggie responded to her graciously.

Tam went on to introduce other people. They were Financial Director—Hector, Artist Director—Steve, Media Director—Ivan, and Film Production Director—Edwin Glen.

Aggie greeted them politely one by one, but she wondered why Tam brought these senior leaders of Finger Entertainment to her event.

On second thought, she seemed to understand. Hadn't Finger Entertainment donated a sum of money to the foundation before? The purpose of Tam's visit today was supposed to bring his people here to learn about their foundation.

Tam gave the same reason. After introducing each other, he looked at Aggie and said in a businesslike manner, "I brought them here to learn about your foundation."

Aggie nodded in response and arranged for one staff to show them around. After that, she turned to be busy with something else.

Aggie thought that Tam was simply here for a visit until Bob rubbed his chin and analyzed it to her in a slow tone, "Why do I think he's not here for a visit?"

Aggie didn't even look up and asked him, "What do you think his purpose is?"

Bob answered thoughtfully, "I think ... he seems to bring his brothers and friends over to meet you."

Bob continued, "It is a kind of ownership declaration ... This is my woman. Now that you all know her, you should respect her in future meetings and so on. Do you understand what I meant?"

After Bob finished speaking, Aggie jerked her head up and looked at him.

A while later, her face suddenly reddened.

On second thought, she found out that Tam seemed to have come here with Bob's intention

Tam had brought so many people here. Although he used the visit as an excuse, he just introduced her to them who were his right-hand men and good friends.

No wonder Ivan called her "Sister Aggie" when he shook hands with her, but he quickly corrected himself "Good day, Dr. Winn". At that time, she only thought she had misheard...

CHAPTER 702 HE IS A GOOD MAN

Aggie was blushing with embarrassment.

She had never been introduced to anyone in this way all her life and to several people at once.

She remembered that Tam had invited her to meet his friends before, and she had refused on the pretext that she had to attend this event today. But Tam came to her door today with his friends, who met her finally.

Aggie was very angry. What she didn't get was why Tam introduced her to his friends after they broke up.

So Aggie found Tam and called him to her office in anger.

"What's the matter?" Tam knew she was angry at first glance and asked her with concern.

Aggie looked around her office, trying to find something to hit him with, but couldn't find the right ones.

So she stared at him questioningly with her arms folded, "Tam, what do you mean by that?"

Tam looked puzzled, and Aggie said through clenched teeth, "What are you doing bringing your friends here? We've broken up! I don't really want to know your friends!"

Tam narrowed his eyes.

He didn't expect her to see through him so quickly, and yeah, he brought them here on purpose.

He wanted to introduce Aggie to them before, but then he split up with her before he dismissed the idea. However, Ivan suggested in the group chat today that they should come along to Aggie's foundation event so that they could meet Aggie. Since they donated money to the foundation, there was nothing wrong with them coming to the event.

The most important thing was that Tam would have to woo Aggie back again, so it was nothing wrong for them to meet her now.

Besides, they had been curious about Aggie. If they had to wait until Tam got back together with Aggie, God knew how long that would take.

Tam was excited about Ivan's offer and thought others would object, but the others said unanimously they wanted to come. So he brought them here.

Tam admitted that it was to get her attention.

Anyway, before he came, he decided to insist that he was showing executives around the foundation if she was angry about that.

So when confronted with Aggie's questioning, he just said, "We're just here to visit the company."

Aggie, "..."

She didn't know what was wrong with her. Even though he was trying to weasel his way out of it, she was sure that he was hiding his true intentions.

But he put it this way, it was not nice of her to insist that he was bringing friends to meet her intentionally. So she pursed her lips, suppressed her anger, and said to him, stone-faced, "Okay, then please leave after the visit and don't disturb the children too much."

With that, she didn't want to talk to Tam anymore, moved round by him with her head down, and intended to leave.

Tam pulled her back, looked at her with a frown, and asked, "Are you angry?"

Tam had thought it wasn't a big deal if Aggie got sullen. After all, affection, hate, and anger were all about love. But now he saw her angry, he couldn't help but panic.

Aggie looked sideways from him, pushed him away, and left.

Tam stood in place with chagrin and let out a long sigh.

Well, he effectively conceded defeat.

He couldn't stand that she was displeased. As soon as she kept a straight face, he felt uneasy.

In fact, Aggie didn't say anything harsh to him. She just told him to leave with his friends after the visit, but he felt... like a duck in a thunderstorm.

He took his cell phone and sent a message in group chat, asking his few friends to leave.

The first thing Ivan asked him after he left the door was, "Why are we leaving so soon? I thought I was going to stay for the event."

Tam gave him a stern look, "Because you came up with this dumb idea. Now she's angry!"

Ivan looked innocent, "Hey, how can you put the blame on me? It was me who put it forward but you agreed to it yourself, didn't you? They all agreed to the idea. Why are you only telling me off?"

Ivan stood up for himself. But Tam ignored him, got into his car, and Alfred drove him away.

The others also drove off, leaving Ivan to sigh in frustration.

Turning to look at the door of the foundation, Ivan decided to go in and apologize to Aggie.

Alright, since he came up with the idea, he should go to apologize.

Aggie was in a better mood after Tam and his friends left, and then she heard the staff inform her, "Dr. Winn, Mr. Yonng one of the visitors who had just left wants to meet you."

Aggie remembered Ivan very well because she had a good memory.

She didn't know why Ivan returned, but after thinking it over, she finally went to see Ivan.

They met in the conference room, and Ivan was waiting for Aggie when she entered.

As soon as Aggie entered, Ivan got up and spoke apologetically, "Dr. Winn, I'm here to apologize to you."

Aggie was puzzled, "We didn't know each other before. Why are you apologizing?"

Aggie said while greeting Ivan to sit down. Ivan sat down and sighed, "I came up with this idea."

Aggie knew what he was talking about at once. It was about the fact that a bunch of them from Finger Entertainment had come to visit her today.

Ivan explained, "We are all working together with President Finger to get to where we are today. He's our boss as well as a friend. Since you've been in a relationship with him, we can see how he's changed and how serious he's about the relationship, so we're curious about you. We are curious to see what kind of girl can conquer his mind and eager to meet you."

"I didn't expect you to break up before we could meet, so I came up with this idea today..." Ivan apologized sincerely once again, "I heard from President Finger that you were angry, so I want to explain to you. Please don't be angry with him. It's all my fault."

Aggie was annoyed before. Looking at Ivan's chagrined expression now, she didn't feel sullen anymore. They had a brotherly bond and Ivan even came to put in a good word for Tam.

She just looked at Ivan and said softly, "It's your idea, but it's his decision to come, so what did you do wrong?"

Ivan was relieved, yet felt something was wrong, "So you're still mad at him?"

She said it wasn't his fault, so she must blame Tam.

Aggie chuckled, "There's nothing to be angry about. I just felt very annoyed at that moment."

She was not the kind of person to bear anyone a grudge. She was mad at Tam for what he did just now, but now she calmed down and got over it.

Ivan laughed with relief, "Why don't I buy you dinner tomorrow? I want to make amends."

Ivan invited Aggie to dinner and wanted to take the opportunity to be a peacemaker for Tam and her.

But Aggie was smart enough to see what he really wanted before declining politely, "Mr. Yonng, my father is not well these days. I go back to see him frequently when I have time. So I'm sorry."

Aggie refused Ivan on the excuse of visiting her father, so Ivan just let it be. After all, she was filial.

Since they both had things to do, Ivan didn't stay any longer and got up to say goodbye to Aggie.

When he was leaving, he paused, looked back at Aggie, and said seriously, "I don't know why you broke up with President Finger, but I want to say that he is a good man."

"Of course he has those devious, cruel, and ruthless approaches in the business. But he's also a man of great affection and righteousness, otherwise, why would we have worked for him for so long?"

Ivan added, "He is a very good friend. I believe he would be perfect as a boyfriend or even as a husband or a father."

With that, he turned around and left.

Aggie stood there quietly for a while, then also lowered her eyes and left the lounge.

Because of what Tam did, Aggie was no longer angry with Tam. But she was a lot more distant from him.

She basically did not answer Tam's calls. When she went home to see Maynard, she was wise to call the maid in advance to see if Tam was there. The maid had been working for them for many years and was devoted to her. Although Tam made several visits to Maynard, he never saw Aggie.

Maynard was puzzled, "I have asked her to come back to eat with me, and she also promised. But every time she called me back and told me that she couldn't come back since something came up."

Tam stroked his chin for a while and then asked Maynard to call the maid over.

Only after he asked the maid did he learn that Aggie had always called the maid in advance to ask if he was there, and the maid had told the truth every time, which made Maynard and Tam laugh.

She even pitted her wits for avoiding Tam.

Maynard had to tell the maid, "Don't be honest with her anymore."

The maid wanted to say something, but Maynard was stern-faced, "Do you want her to stay single like this?"

The maid actually knew that Maynard wanted to set up Tam and Aggie, but Aggie was also her master. When she asked about something, the maid could only be honest with her. Now that Maynard gave such a straightforward order, the maid would do what Maynard told her.

In fact, the maid was going to frustrate Tam, so that he would not dare to be contemptuous to Aggie even when he succeeded in wooing her easily. After all, he was a playboy before.

However, Aggie didn't see Tam in her home. Instead, she saw him in the hospital. Because Tam was injured.

CHAPTER 703 A TRICK

Aggie was at work when Elyse called her, "Aggie, Tam just got hurt and came to the emergency room."

Aggie felt a sharp pain in her chest, and her voice trembled, "How is he? How did he get hurt?"

Elyse told the truth, "I heard from Dante that he was stabbed by Patrick. The bleeding has been stopped. Although it is a superficial wound, it is... terrible."

"I'll be right there." It was inconvenient to talk about it on the phone, so Aggie hung up and hurried out of the office to the emergency room.

Aggie was so preoccupied with Tam's injuries that she forgot that she hadn't talked to him for several days and that they had broken up.

Only after she arrived at the emergency room did she calm down a bit. Realizing that she overreacted, she calmed herself down and regained composure.

In front of the wound care room, Dante looking worried was waiting there with Elyse.

Aggie walked over and asked Dante, "How did he get stabbed by Patrick? He is such a good fighter. He should have been able to avoid being hurt by Patrick, not to mention that you were also present."

Since Moira's case was about to go to trial, it was time for Patrick to be brought back after being deliberately left on the run for so many days. Aggie was clear about that. She also knew that Tam had gone with Dante to see Patrick, but she didn't expect Tam to be stabbed.

Patrick was no match for Dante and Tam, and even she could knock Patrick down.

Dante looked at her, lowered his voice slightly, and said, "He did manage to avoid it, and I had the power to stop it. But Tam took the knife himself on purpose."

"What?" Aggie was surprised incredibly.

Dante added, "I heard from Tam that Patrick was convicted of bigamy with your mother and he would spend two years in prison at most. But now that Tam has been stabbed, it's a different story. Patrick is under suspicion of intentional homicide."

"Patrick is a scumbag. If he gets out of jail soon, he might seek revenge on you and your father. But now he's going to be in jail for a few more years and has to give up all his plans." Dante told Aggie all about Tam's intentions.

Aggie was shocked, "How could he be so stupid? He doesn't need to hurt himself like this. Even if Patrick wants to take revenge, we just put the matter aside for the time being."

Aggie always felt that there was something wrong with Dante's words. Tam was influential in South City while Patrick was nothing. It was easy for Tam to deal with Patrick, so why would Tam want to set himself up to get hurt?

However, since Aggie had mixed feelings and was extremely worried about Tam, she didn't have time to think about anything. Instead, she just stood at the door of the debridement room worriedly, waiting for the nurses inside to treat Tam's wound.

Dante stood there, unfazed, thinking to himself that he, who was honest, actually lied because of Tam.

Tam wasn't stabbed by Patrick for getting him into severer punishment. They were so influential that it was a piece of cake for them to prevent Patrick from staging a comeback. And Patrick wasn't just guilty of bigamy. He had figured out everything Patrick had done over the years and supposed that Patrick was going to be sentenced to almost ten years in prison.

But when Patrick got angry and stabbed Tam with a knife, Dante tried to stop him but Tam created space between himself and Dante. Then Patrick's knife went into Tam's arm.

Patrick was suspected of murder, and now it would be not easy to get out of jail.

Dante only learned of Tam's attempt afterward. This was his plan.

He wished that Aggie would be heartbroken for him when she knew he was stabbed by Patrick. And for the sake of his purpose, he got Elyse involved in it. Although his wound was not too deep, he forced Elyse, a professional nurse, to call Aggie and say that his wound was very deep...

Dante took a look at Aggie's pale face, thinking that Tam's goal had been achieved. Because Aggie had probably trotted all the way over here.

If Aggie didn't care about Tam, why would she have come at once?

Tam was the winner.

Elyse, who was forced to lie, was so guilty that she could barely look Aggie in the eye. After reassuring Aggie, she went back to her post on the pretext that she had things to do.

Elyse was a bit annoyed. She was obviously Aggie's best friend but lied to Aggie along with Tam.

But she saw that Tam really liked Aggie. As a best friend, she hoped that Aggie could make up with Tam and cherish the man who loved her.

So she agreed to help Tam make the wound sound serious...

When they made up, she would make amends with Aggie.

After Elyse left, Tam came out a short time later. His white clean shirt was now bloodstained in a mess, and the left sleeve of the shirt was cut by the nurse, in order to facilitate the dressing of his wounds.

Tam was injured in the left upper arm, and even though the nurse had wrapped it up, there was faint blood oozing from the gauze. Aggie just felt bad when she saw it.

Because of the blood loss, Tam was pale.

As soon as Aggie saw him come out, she rushed up to him and asked, "How do you feel?"

Tam smiled at her, "Don't worry. The wound itself is superficial."

As soon as he said that, Aggie was more depressed, feeling guilty, and ... heartbroken.

Patrick was involved with her after all. Tam was hurt by Patrick. And he hadn't completely recovered from the fracture in his arm...

Aggie didn't ask why he didn't avoid it, but just looked at him and asked, "What did the doctor say?"

"Nothing serious. I will just recuperate." Tam made it sound so simple.

"Elyse just told me that your wound is quite severe and deep..." Elyse was a nurse, so Aggie believed Elyse and thought that he said this on purpose just to not worry her.

Dante came over and supported Tam as if Tam was weak from the loss of blood.

Tam said to Aggie, "Patrick is no longer a threat to you, so you have nothing to worry about."

Then he added, "You go back to work, and Dante will drive me home."

Aggie opened her mouth to say something, but finally just said, "Get some rest."

Actually Aggie wanted to say who would take care of him when he went home. He was the only one who lived there, and the housekeeper just worked for a part-time job here. Besides, there were the chef and Alfred.

The chef was just responsible for cooking, while Alfred was the driver.

But then she considered that Alfred could take care of him, and it was not appropriate for her to worry about whether he would be attended by someone. So she bit back the words she would like to have said.

Tam was then helped out of the hospital by Dante, while Aggie went back to her office.

But her mind was in chaos as she was always worried about the wound on Tam's arm.

His arm was always hurt.

Maynard called her at the end of the day, "Aggie, I heard that Tam got hurt?"

"Yeah." Aggie wasn't surprised that Maynard knew about it. He was closer to Tam than to her now.

Maynard was guilty, "He was stabbed by Patrick because of us. I want to go see him, but I've been in bad health lately..."

Aggie knew what Maynard meant and agreed quickly, "I'll go see him after work later and convey your concern to him."

Even if Maynard didn't suggest it, she was going to visit Tam after work.

As Tam said, they were still friends after breaking up, and Tam was injured because of them.

Aggie bought a big fruit basket from the fruit store in front of the hospital after work and drove to Tam's house.

The chef was surprised to see her and then said, "President Finger should be upstairs in the study. I told him to recuperate and not handle the business, but he wouldn't listen to me."

"You came just in time. Go up and persuade him. He should listen to you." The chef took the fruit basket she carried and turned to leave.

Aggie glanced at the second floor and stepped up.

At the door of the study, she could hear Tam on the phone. Aggie knocked on the door, and Tam hung up, came over, and opened the door for her.

Tam was surprised to see her, "Aggie, what are you doing here?"

Aggie looked at the wound on his arm, "I came to visit you."

Aggie said this without much affection as if she was visiting a friend.

Unfazed, Tam beckoned her downstairs, "Have you had dinner yet?"

Aggie paused, but then said, "No, I'm just checking on you. Since you're all right, I'm going to go."

He was working in the study in high spirits. It seemed that he wasn't seriously injured.

But as soon as Aggie finished speaking, Tam suddenly said "Ouch" while he looked in pain. Aggie was scared and grabbed him at once, "How do you feel? Does it hurt?"

To be continued

CHAPTER 704 MY GIRLFRIEND

Tam frowned uncomfortably and nodded, "Yes..."

Aggie hurriedly helped him sit down on the sofa in the living room and asked him, "Why does it suddenly hurt? Do you want to go to the hospital for a checkup?"

Aggie was a psychiatrist and knew nothing about the traumatic injuries. She hadn't seen Tam's wounds so she didn't know if he was badly injured or not.

Tam sighed out as if he was in pain, "I used the computer in the study while working on my business and I got hurt."

In fact, Tam didn't feel that hurt.

Although he had some pain after being stabbed, he was a man and it was nothing. But when he heard that she was going, he had to pretend to be in pain to make her stay.

Even if he couldn't let her stay overnight, he could at least ask her to have dinner with him, otherwise, he would have been hurt for nothing.

Aggie was very angry when she heard from Tam that it was because of working that he got hurt. But she didn't often lose her temper, and just said with a straight face, "Your arm has been hurt a lot this year. It was broken, and now it was stabbed, so I'm afraid it will be completely ruined."

Tam chuckled. He liked the way she cornered him sarcastically.

The chef came out at that moment, looked at Tam, and asked, "Dinner is ready, is Dr. Winn staying for dinner?"

Tam didn't wait for Aggie to say anything and made a decision on her behalf directly, "Well, Dr. Winn is staying with us."

Aggie looked at him and didn't say anything to refuse.

Aggie was intelligent, and she had been seeing through something for some time. Although Tam promised to break up with her, he had no intention of letting go.

She was quite annoyed at first when she saw through his attempts, but then she calmed down.

He got hurt today, which reshuffled her mind.

It showed her another point that although she insisted on breaking up with Tam, she still cared for him as usual.

In the end, she was actually no different from Tam. They broke up, but in reality, neither completely let go of the other.

Aggie always thought she was very liberal. She thought that as long as Tam did not always pester her, she could ignore him.

He did not pester her these days, but she was distracted by his injury.

At the moment she heard that Tam was hurt, she couldn't fool herself by her reaction.

Aggie was tired.

She didn't know what to do now. She cared for him, but she didn't dare to approach him.

Sitting at the table, Aggie came back from her thoughts and looked at the table full of food and said to the chef in surprise, "He said that you just send him off with two dishes and soup every day, but it doesn't seem that way now. You still cooked a big dinner."

The chef was caught in a moment, completely speechless.

He really only cooked two dishes and a soup for Tam some time ago, but tonight he made so much because Tam told him in advance that Aggie would come over and asked him to cook more.

Because at that time Tam was sure that Aggie would come to visit him.

At that time, he teased Tam, saying he was so confident that she would come to see him. If he cooked a big dinner but she didn't show up, it would be a waste.

Now it seemed Aggie had no idea that she was always tricked by Tam, so the chef didn't dare to answer.

But Tam was quick to respond, "I'm injured today, so of course, he had to make the substantial dinner for me."

The chef gave Tam a thumbs up and said hurriedly, "Yes, his arm was stabbed not long after it was healed. He needs to be patched up."

Aggie glanced at the chef, and then at Tam, and saw through a lot.

But she did not say anything more and took the chopsticks to eat as she lowered her eyes.

They did not speak much during the meal. Aggie conveyed Maynard's concern for Tam, and Tam briefly told her about the progress of Patrick and Moira's case and how miserable the future would be for both of them.

Tam also said that Moira and Patrick's son was taken back to their hometown by Patrick's parents, and couldn't live in the lap of luxury since then. Dante found that Patrick's son was not going to amount to anything. It was a blessing if he didn't do anything bad like his dad.

Aggie felt nothing for them, so she didn't care about them, just listened, and ate quietly.

After dinner, Aggie looked at the time and was about to leave, but she asked, "You can't do many things on your own with your arm like this. Why didn't Alfred come to help you?"

Tam sighed, "Alfred had some family problems recently and took time off to go back home."

Aggie, "..."

He made it sound like he was telling the truth. Now that Aggie saw through his tricks, she always felt he was lying.

Aggie got her cell phone and called Alfred, asking where Alfred was now.

Alfred answered, "Dr. Winn, I'm in my hometown. What can I do for you?"

Aggie heard the noisy voice from the other end of the phone, and a dialect she did not understand, so she could vaguely conclude that Alfred had really gone back home.

After hanging up, Aggie looked at Tam, who had one arm bandaged, and frowned, debating whether she should stay a while longer.

But before she could make a decision, the doorbell suddenly rang.

The chef went to open the door. There was a man and a girl. The man was nearly middle-aged, while the girl looked very young. Maybe she was in her early twenties.

As soon as the chef opened the door, the girl ran in and went straight to Tam on the sofa.

"Tam, I heard you were hurt, are you okay?" The girl ran over and sat down next to Tam, and held Tam's uninjured arm affectionately.

Tam, "..."

His first reaction was to try to shake off the girl, but the girl hugged him very tightly. With injured his arm, he failed. He was so nervous that he hurried to look at Aggie standing aside.

Aggie frowned and watched them coldly. Before Tam could explain anything to her, the middle-aged man who arrived with the girl went over.

The middle-aged man snapped, "Ruby, President Finger is injured. Get up now!"

Only then did the girl let go of Tam, and the next second she saw Tam's injured arm, she immediately exclaimed in shock, "You shed so much blood. It must be killing you!"

Tam had blood oozing from the gauze covering her arm, which was shocking to the girl, and she was so heartbroken that her eyes were red.

Tam glanced at Aggie, then got up from the sofa with difficulty to greet the middle-aged man, "President Pond, when did you arrive? You could have told me in advance, so I could have someone to pick you up."

The middle-aged man was the boss of one of the investment banks that Tam had gone to the US to talk to, and after he returned in advance, he informed them that they could come to find him if they wanted to continue the talks.

The girl was President Pond's daughter, a sino-us hybrid, aged 20, and her name was Ruby.

Speaking of her, Tam had a headache.

Ruby fell in love with him at first sight and chased after him during the days he was in America, which disturbed him.

If it were in the past, he would be interested in flirting with Miss Pond who came from a rich family, pretty and young. But now he was completely out of the mood. And every time Ruby was around, he just got annoyed.

In order to dull Ruby's interest in himself, he clearly told Ruby that he fell in love with someone else and that there was no way he would have a new sweetheart. However, Ruby said she didn't care about that and continued to stalk him.

Tam was very helpless. He didn't expect Ruby to follow President Pond here at such a critical moment.

He just played a trick and sent Alfred back home, just to get Aggie to come over and take care of him. He planned to spend time with Aggie and get back together with her. Now Ruby was here. Was his plan to mess up?

But President Pond's investment bank was his favorite. He couldn't give Ruby a hard time or he would upset President Pond.

President Pond walked over, glanced at Aggie, and then greeted Tam politely, "We didn't tell you in advance because we were afraid to bother you. We didn't expect to hear the news of President Finger's injury when we arrived. Ruby was worried about your injury and anxiously asked me to bring her over to visit you. So we took the liberty of coming here."

President Pond asked, "How do you feel...?"

Tam smiled and explained, "It's a superficial injury, nothing serious."

The young girl spotted Aggie standing by, and seeing Aggie's extraordinary and beautiful appearance, she was hostile towards Aggie and asked, "Who are you? Why are you at Tam's house at this time of night?"

The girl finished. President Pond rebuked, "Ruby, how come you have no manners? This must be President Finger's guest."

Aggie was about to say goodbye when Tam came over and took her hand, introducing them with a smile, "President Pond, Miss Pond, this is my girlfriend, Aggie."

Aggie glared at him and tried to pull her hand out, but Tam held it tightly.

CHAPTER 705 BE JEALOUS

After Tam introduced Aggie as his girlfriend, President Pond and Ruby's expressions changed.

President Pond was a man who had seen the world and was able to control his emotions without being shocked. But Ruby was calm and her face changed, as she glaring at Tam and accusing him, "You only said you had a crush on someone when you were in America, not that you had a girlfriend!

Then she glared at Aggie and asked, "Why are you here?"

Aggie didn't want to get involved in such a triangle and hated the way the arrogant girl was bossing her around, so she tried to break away from Tam's grip and leave. But Tam held her hand and told Ruby frankly, "To be precise, she is my ex-girlfriend, and for some reason, we broke up, but I have never forgotten her."

Ruby stomped, "What ex-girlfriend? You must talk nonsense that you have never forgotten her. I think she does not like you at all."

Ruby saw clearly that Aggie was very cold to Tam, and that she didn't seem to love Tam.

She had come from America to his country for Tam. She was the one who loved him the most!

Aggie jerked her hand again. This time Tam did not hold it tightly, but Aggie could feel his heartbreak in the way Tam looked at her, as if he was silently protested if she left like this, he must be very hurt.

If she left at this point, it was the same as denying Tam's claim that she was his girlfriend and disowning her relationship with Tam.

Aggie clenched her hand but finally looked at President Pond and Ruby, saying politely, "Sorry, I have to go. I'll leave you alone."

Without looking at Tam, she just grabbed her coat and left.

"She's gone, and I'll stay and take care of you." The girl's voice reached Aggie's ears, and she quickened her pace.

Then she heard Ruby say, "Oh, you're hurt so badly. It must hurt a lot. I feel so sorry for you."

Then Aggie couldn't hear anything else, because she got out of the house.

After getting into her car, Aggie drove away.

Inside the house, Tam looked soberly in the direction Aggie had left, ignoring Ruby's chatter beside him.

Only when the sound of the engine came and he was sure that Aggie had really left him behind, did Tam withdraw his gaze and look at his guests with a smile, "Sorry President Pond, Forgive me.

President Pond, after all, was an old man with rich experience, and he could see the tangled emotions between Tam and the woman who had just left at a glance.

He smiled and shook his head at Tam, "It's nothing, it's fun for young people to be together."

Ruby was unhappy with what her father said and said in anger, "What's all this bickering? They didn't fight at all, okay? That woman doesn't even like Tam. She even gave him that attitude!"

Ruby looked at Tam and said, "Tam, you like aloof women, don't you? The more she ignores you, the more you love her."

Tam looked at Ruby, who was in her best years, a sino-us hybrid, with strong and beautiful features, but he wasn't appealed. Perhaps he liked this type of girl before, but after being with Aggie, he understood that the love between mature men and women was more evocative.

After getting used to Aggie's calmness and open-mindedness, he only felt annoyed in the face of Ruby's chattering and arrogance.

So he didn't bother to say anything more to Ruby, because she wouldn't understand even if he did.

Turning to Mr. Pond, he spoke politely and respectfully, "President Pond, I'm sorry I can't entertain you today. Tomorrow I'll host a banquet and we'll enjoy drinking."

Tam was in a bit of a mood and felt unwell with his wound.

His arm had just been stabbed today, and it was still hurting.

So he was not in the mood to entertain them. If Ruby continued to stay and make trouble, he would turn his back on them and dismiss the cooperation with them.

Mr. Pond saw Tam impatient and stood up to say goodbye, "President Finger, get some rest. As for the business, President Finger, you're injured, and it's not convenient for socializing. You can have someone else talk to me."

Mr. Pond was reasonable to hint his daughter who was about to shout to shut up.

Tam looked solemn, "It's not serious. I will talk to you personally about the business."

Tam said this to show his respect for the partner.

Mr. Pond nodded, "Then we will meet again tomorrow, goodbye."

Ruby came all the way from the United States to South City, and now that Tam was injured, she didn't want to miss the opportunity to take care of Tam and build a relationship with him. So she didn't want to leave with her father, "Dad, I want to stay and take care of Tam. He's so injured. He can't take care of himself! "

"Ruby!" Mr. Pond scolded with a stern face.

Ruby grunted and Tam spoke up, "Miss Pond, it's not that serious. It hurts a little, but it's not so bad that I can't take care of myself."

And he then said, "You have come a long way today, go back early and rest."

He meant that he didn't need Ruby to take care of him at all.

Ruby stomped, "Tam, why are you so ungrateful!"

Ruby was also pursued by so many young talents and was spoiled by her parents since she was young. When she was in America, she chased after him all day long, but he ignored her. Now that she had chased him all the way, had that not impressed him?

After Ruby finished speaking, she ran out in a huff, leaving Mr. Pond and Tam alone.

Mr. Pond looked at Tam and said, "President Finger, Ruby has been spoiled by me since she was a child. She is a bit arrogant, please do not blame her. Now I just want to know if you really have no feelings for Ruby. And are you serious about that girl just now?"

Mr. Pond explained again, "I support Ruby's pursuit of you, otherwise, I wouldn't have brought her here. I think everyone has the right to pursue the person she likes. But if you don't want to give up that girl, I will advise Ruby to give up."

It was a relief to Tam that Mr. Pond asked such a direct question.

He made his attitude clear to Mr. Pond, "After knowing that girl just now, I have lost interest in any other woman, including your daughter."

Then he added, "You may not know why I broke up with her."

Mr. Pond remained calm and composed and Tam explained, "She broke up with me because I scared her by proposing marriage."

Mr. Pond was surprised for a moment after hearing this, and then he was clear of the story.

A man who was willing to propose to a woman must love her deeply.

"I know. I will talk to Ruby." With that, Mr. Pond excused himself and turned to leave.

When there was real silence around, Tam threw himself into the sofa, vexed.

The cook brought him a glass of water, "I saw Dr. Winn pale when that little girl hugged you just now."

Tam opened his eyes instantly, "Are you sure?"

If Aggie was pale, it meant she was jealous.

The chef nodded, "You were all focused on the guests, so I took an extra look at Dr. Winn."

The chef pursed his lips and smiled, "I can tell you with certainty that there was a hint of annoyance on her face at that time. She must have minded. After all, that little girl hugged you so close and almost stuck on you. She must be jealous and angry."

Tam was in a good mood, "So did she ignore me and left because she was angry and jealous?"

The chef nodded, "I think so, otherwise, she should have been intelligent to chime in with you."

"I think so." Tam approved of the chef's words.

Aggie was always intelligent and reasonable, and she always showed some respect for him and defended him in front of outsiders. But this time she just turned around and left. She must be just angry because Ruby hugged him.

After he got together with Aggie, he had rumors with Jennie and Vanna, and Vice Mayor Adams intended to marry his daughter to him, but those counted for little. No woman had ever hugged him in front of Aggie and had another intimate physical contact with him. And no woman had ever cared about him in front of her.

Ruby threw herself at him. Aggie must be jealous.

So she just ignored him and walked away, which was understandable.

The chef said again, "She's gone anyway, so forget about it and get some rest."

Tam got up after drinking the water and braced himself to go back to the bedroom.

He explained to Dante and the others about President Pond's surprise visit, and then called Aggie to explain his relationship with Ruby after thinking over it.

However, Aggie never answered the phone. He wondered if she did it on purpose or didn't hear the call.

It would be better to send a message directly so that she would see it whether she answered the call or not.

He explained to Aggie that Ruby had been chasing after him in the message and that he had no interest in Ruby. He thought his explanation was perfect, but after the message was sent, he didn't receive a reply from Aggie even after he waited for ages.

CHAPTER 706 I LOVE HIM

Aggie saw the message Tam sent to her, but she didn't reply.

She didn't know what to reply. She wondered if she should reply "Oh, I see", or "There's no need to explain to me what your relationship with her is".

And she didn't calm down until now. It was the first time she was so rude when she just left Tam's house like that.

But she didn't know what was wrong with her back then. She just refused to stay there for a second.

All she could think of was Ruby hugging Tam and caring about him. Tam... didn't push her away.

Even if he couldn't push it away just because his arm was hurt, he didn't say a single harsh word. Was he fond of the young and beautiful girl throwing herself at him like that?

If she was right, Ruby's breasts stuck to his arm, and Ruby said tenderly and thoughtfully that she would stay and take care of him...

Previously she had been tolerant and generous when she was faced with Tam's gossip. For one thing, she did not have too much affection for Tam at that time, and for another, she did not see him intimate with other women, so she did not feel unpleasant.

But just now...

Aggie took a deep breath and got up and went to the bathroom.

After throwing herself into the warm bathtub, she felt warmed up and slowly calmed down.

She felt that she was getting unfamiliar with herself now.

When she was single, she lived a life of ease and relaxation. Since Tam got involved with her and haunted her, she no longer was detached but fell into the mundane world, experienced all kinds of emotions, and now she was even jealous!

This night Aggie did not sleep well. So did Tam.

He felt unwell with his wound and was always thinking about Aggie.

After he finished talking about the work in the group, he also told them what happened at night. Ivan immediately proposed, "Boss, I think Miss Pond came at the right time. You can appeal to her to be around you more often, which can stimulate Dr. Winn and make her realize how popular and important you are. Maybe she will come back to you."

As soon as Ivan offered like that, his proposal was rejected by Steve, "Don't give us any bad advice. You still have screwed us with the last trip to the foundation."

Ivan, "..."

He continued again, "Boss, all your gossip girls in the past are not competitive enough. Vanna is beautiful but not of good ancestry, and Vice Mayor Adams' daughter comes from a decent family but is not pretty. Ruby is beautiful from a rich family. She's very threatening, and Dr. Winn might really get nervous."

Ivan was active while Steve was more conservative, so he mockingly said, "If Dr. Winn takes it seriously, she might distance herself from our boss farther away in a fit of rage!"

They disagreed with each other, and others took sides. It was found that the two sides were evenly matched, and eventually, it was settled.

The next morning Aggie went to work, but to her surprise, Ruby was waiting under her apartment building.

Money really talked, and Ruby found out where she lived so quickly.

But Ruby didn't look good. Her eyes were red and swollen, and she obviously cried a lot.

Ruby saw her coming down the stairs, got out of the car, and walked towards her to stop her.

Aggie looked at her calmly, "Miss Pond, what do you want from me?"

Ruby bit her lip and looked at the cool woman in front of her. She admitted that Aggie was uniquely beautiful, and when she saw Aggie walking out of the building with her bag in a black coat, she was so graceful and beautiful that even Ruby couldn't help but be attracted.

However, when Tam was really fond of her and Aggie did not like Tam, would Tam only be distressed?

From the first moment she saw Aggie last night, Aggie looked aloof and distant. So Ruby felt that Aggie didn't like Tam much.

Back at the hotel last night, her father solemnly told her what Tam had said before urging her to let go.

She was so angry that she cried most of the night. She never thought Tam was so devoted to Aggie and wanted to marry her.

To her surprise, Aggie refused to marry Tam and dumped him.

She just didn't think Aggie liked Tam much. After hearing this, she decided Aggie didn't love Tam at all.

Didn't couples who loved each other wanted to be together?

That was why she came to Aggie today.

Looking at Aggie, Ruby asked with red eyes, "Miss Winn, I just want to ask you whether you love Tam or not."

Aggie thought Ruby really didn't know what love was.

Whether she loved a man could not be expressed in words.

What if she said yes? What if she said no?

Seeing her silent, Ruby said, "If you don't love him, please let him go."

Aggie chuckled, "Miss Pond, you sound like you already know I don't love him. So why are you still asking me if I love him or not?"

Ruby did not expect that she could pick out the loopholes in her words in such a clear and logical way and pointed them out directly. For a time, she was speechless and could not say anything.

Ruby saw her as cold and detached and thought that she was ineloquent at all, but it turned out that Ruby had underestimated her.

Ruby pursed her lips and glared at Aggie before she spoke again with irritation, "Do you love him? If you love him, how could you not marry him?"

Once Ruby said this, Aggie knew there was nothing for them to talk about.

However, she felt that it was very impolite for her to leave like this without replying to Ruby.

With one hand carrying her bag and one hand in her coat pocket, Aggie smiled and spoke in a relaxed tone, "Miss Pond, since you want an answer, I'll do what you want, and I think you'll like it."

Ruby's eyes lit up as soon as Aggie said that.

She had a tape recorder on her, and as soon as Aggie said she didn't love Tam, Ruby would immediately send it to Tam, telling him to give up this woman who didn't love him at all!

Aggie stepped forward to close the distance with Ruby, then said word for word, "I love him, very much."

Ruby, "..."

Ruby's face suddenly turned red with anger. She was really... pissed off.

Aggie looked at Ruby's expression proudly, walked past Ruby gracefully, and went to work.

Ruby was so angry that she just stood there and stomped and yelled at her back, "Aggie, I'm not done with you!"

Aggie just said that Ruby would like her answer, but then she said she loved Tam, and she knew it was not the answer that Ruby wanted!

She was clearly teasing Ruby!

Ruby hadn't ever been teased like that. She felt that it was a great shame.

She turned around and rushed to the car, and tears fell from her eyes.

In fact, Ruby was not only crying because she was angry with Aggie, but also because Aggie said she loved Tam very much.

She could hear that Aggie was not joking at all.

Aggie was serious when she said she loved Tam very much.

And it was because of her seriousness that Ruby panicked so much.

Having mixed feelings, she could not bear it and cried out.

How was it possible? How was it possible?

Aggie didn't love Tam. She didn't love Tam at all with that cold look!

If she loved him, she should be as passionate, eager, and active as Ruby was. She must not like Aggie who didn't say a word.

Ruby went back to the hotel in tears. Although she recorded the whole process of talking to Aggie, she could not show it to Tam.

After returning to the hotel, she deleted all the recordings. Aggie said she loved Tam. Ruby wouldn't be stupid and told Tam about that.

Aggie calmly went to the office and Hathaway called her at noon.

When Aggie picked up, Hathaway said on the other end, "Aggie, I went to visit Tam at his house with Leon this morning.

Aggie frowned slightly, wondering if Ruby had gone to his house again.

Hathaway added, "Don't get me wrong. She doesn't live at Tam's place. When we went there, Tam was at home discussing work with the girl's father, and the girl should have followed her father there. There're some people from Tam's company."

Hathaway continued, "I felt uncomfortable that the girl behaved like the hostess. She served us tea, chatted with us, and cared about Tam..."

Hathaway coughed lightly, "Leon looked like he wanted to strangle Tam."

Aggie laughed softly after hearing this. She could imagine how Leon looked like.

Although she just recognized Leon as her brother, Leon already treated her as his family, and she knew he always defended her.

When Leon met Ruby who had that attitude, she could imagine how angry Leon was. It was nice of him not to tear down Tam's house on the spot.

Hathaway sighed, "Hey, you're laughing. You're quite careless. What do you think?"

Aggie said, "I don't think much of it. We've broken up. Isn't it normal that he's got a woman around?"

Then she narrowed her eyes and said, "Do you think it's always the hostess who serves the tea?"

Hathaway released and then giggled, "Aggie, look at you."

The one who served tea could be the hostess or the maid.

CHAPTER 707 LOVE EACH OTHER

After Hathaway finished talking to Aggie, he told Leon, who was beside him, what Aggie had said.

Tam was injured. Leon should go to visit him as a business partner or as a friend. After visiting, they left Tam's house.

Because Leon was sullen, Hathaway rushed to call Aggie to ask what was going on.

After hearing what Hathaway relayed, Leon asked Hathaway with a wrinkled brow, "Are you sure it was Aggie who said that?"

It was not like Aggie's style when she was sarcastic about Ruby being a maid. Leon thought it was Hathaway's style.

Hathaway nodded heavily, "It's true that Aggie said it herself."

Leon suddenly laughed, raised his hand, and rubbed Hathaway's soft hair, "Have you set a terrible example for Aggie?"

Leon ridiculed Hathaway but she was not angry at all, because she really poured ridicule on others.

But Hathaway didn't admit that she had anything to do with it, poking him in the chest and protesting, "She's just a little mean at heart."

Actually, she was not mean.

Ruby's aggressiveness and self-righteousness must have annoyed Aggie.

Hathaway snickered in Leon's arms and told him, "She authored personal attack on Ruby. Aggie really cares about Tam."

Then she added, "Maybe Aggie will be swayed this time."

Leon was about to say something but remembered that he had been criticized by her last time for being lousy in love, so he said nothing.

She had always been more thorough than him in emotional matters and knew more about love than he did. So if she thought Tam and Aggie were matched, then they were really fit for each other.

Aggie was thinking of calling Tam during the lunch break to care for him, but after hearing Hathaway say on the phone that Ruby was acting as the hostess, she didn't have the slightest idea to call Tam and didn't bother to care for him, thinking he must be doing well with Ruby around.

Tam moved the office to his home because he was physically injured and wanted to talk to President Pond in person about the partnership. Tina came to Tam's villa with the relevant documents and several executives from Finger Entertainment, using Tam's study as a meeting room for negotiations.

The chef came over early in the morning to prepare food and drinks for the meeting.

Mr. Pond brought his assistant, and Ruby came along too. Although she had been pissed off by Aggie in the morning, she did not tell anyone and did not intend to give up on Tam. She continued to show her concern about Tam after arriving.

Tam naturally did not talk to her, but only smiled politely at her, and then gestured Tina into the work.

In fact, since Mr. Pond brought his assistant and Tina was also there, serving tea was something that the assistants would be in charge of. But Ruby had to rush to do that. Especially when Leon and Hathaway arrived, she was like a hostess, otherwise, Leon would not be that sulky.

When Leon and Hathaway left and Tam continued to work, Ruby went to the kitchen and asked the cook to make her a cup of coffee.

The cook was not impressed with Ruby at all, so her attitude towards Ruby was quite cold.

The chef thought that Ruby was so thick-skinned that she was chasing Tam to his place. If he liked her too, so be it. She was acting like the hostess, bossing others around, and shamelessly throwing herself at him, but Tam barely gave her a look all the time. But she was able to stay here like that.

She said yesterday that Aggie didn't love Tam. The chef who cooked for them for many days was more qualified to comment on whether Aggie loved Tam or not than she was.

If Aggie didn't love Tam, could they have slept together before?

If she didn't love Tam, would Aggie have come to visit last night?

If Ruby hadn't come uninvited last night, maybe Aggie would have stayed to help take care of Tam, but she came and pissed Aggie off.

Ruby still had the nerve to say that Aggie didn't love Tam. In his opinion, Ruby didn't love Tam. She knew that he was injured, but she still stuck to him as soon as she entered the door. She didn't care where Tam was injured. Was she not afraid to touch Tam's injury?

If Tam was injured in the chest and abdomen, he would be tormented by the pain again when she threw herself at Tam's arms like that.

He would feel extremely painful.

Last night Tam's face was pale because of blood loss, she still had the nerve to argue with Tam about love. She was clearly selfish!

However, Ruby was Tam's guest after all, so when she asked for coffee, the chef still made a cup for her.

After Ruby took a sip, she frowned and disliked it, "What kind of coffee is this? It's awful!"

The chef, "..."

He really wanted to hit her.

Because there were valuable guests, he made every cup of coffee out of his best craftsmanship, and the coffee beans were Tam's collection, and each one was the top quality. He made the coffee with Tam's high-grade coffee beans skillfully and wholeheartedly. She didn't even like it.

Did she know how to taste coffee?

He was raged but he managed to restrain his anger. He looked at Ruby and asked, "Is it bad?"

Ruby said nonchalantly, "Of course, it tastes awful."

The chef laughed, "Dr. Winn liked it so much when she lived here that she asked me to make her a cup of coffee every day. She even said that a cup of my coffee in the morning would put her in a good mood for the whole day."

The first part of this statement was true, but the second part was fabricated by the chef himself. Because he really hated Ruby to denigrate his craft like this.

Even if she really found the coffee unpleasant, he could accept it. Everyone's taste was different, but her way of expression was too hurtful.

If she had been more polite, he wouldn't have been so angry and irritated, and he wouldn't have targeted her in this way.

Ruby was shocked for a moment by his words.

Then she asked angrily, "What did you say? Did Aggie live here?"

The chef snorted, "Mr. Finger likes her so much, and she loves Mr. Finger. What's wrong with a couple who love each other living together?"

Because she kept saying last night that Aggie didn't love Tam, the chef deliberately emphasized that Aggie and Tam loved each other.

Ruby was so angry that she stomped.

Although Tam had said before that Aggie was his ex-girlfriend, she didn't expect that they had lived together for a long time. The thought that Aggie used to live here all day made her feel jealous and crazy.

How come Aggie got a man as good and perfect as Tam?

When the chef saw that he had succeeded in making Ruby angry, he felt much better.

He lifted his hand and took the cup of coffee that Ruby had taken a sip from and poured it out in the sink, saying, "Since Miss Pond doesn't like it, let's pour it out."

"You--" Ruby was so angry that she couldn't say anything as she stared at him.

She did find the coffee very bad, but he said Aggie liked it, so she wanted to taste it again. But she didn't expect him to pour it. She was pissed off.

Although this chef looked very polite, she always felt that he was deliberately provoking her.

After washing the cups, the chef said, "Oh yes, I forgot to tell you Mr. Finger also loves this kind of coffee. He has the same taste as Dr. Winn. He likes whatever Dr. Winn likes, and he must also hate whatever Dr. Winn feels disgusted with."

After the chef said this, he turned around and walked away to check on his baked goods in the oven.

Ruby stood there and almost cried with anger.

The chef said that Tam must also hate whatever Dr. Winn felt disgusted with. Aggie hated her so much, so did Tam hate her too?

Finally Ruby was so angry that she turned around and ran away, and the chef felt more comfortable in the spacious and airy kitchen.

Mr. Pond and his group officially participated in the project of Film City. To Tam, the deal meant the launch of the project he had been planning for years.

Although he hated Ruby, Mr. Pond and the investment bank behind him were his best bets.

He didn't care what Ruby was up to, and she couldn't make any trouble. The problem between him and Aggie was not about the outsiders.

Lunch was served at Tam's villa, and dinner was served at the hotel.

Tam hosted a banquet, and although he was not feeling well, he went to the hotel as a courtesy and ate together until late.

Aggie slept until midnight when her cell phone suddenly rang, she looked at the caller ID and saw that it was Tam. She also looked at the time and it was already 1:00 at night.

Aggie didn't know what Tam was up to in the middle of the night, so she hung up.

But he called her again. She picked up and got a little annoyed, "Tam, what are you doing?"

The other end was silent. Aggie frowned and listened quietly, heard his heavy breathing, sat up from the bed, "Tam, what's wrong with you?"

"I'm... I have a fever and I'm weak..." His voice reached her ears, and Aggie was anxious.

"How come you suddenly have a fever?" Aggie suddenly remembered that Tam had a knife wound. Now that he suddenly had a fever, it must be an inflammation.

So she hurriedly said, "I think it's your wound that's inflamed."

She said as she got up, "I'll go over and call an ambulance for you."

CHAPTER 708 REFLECT ON THEMSELVES

Tam's voice rang out, "I've called the ambulance. I'm sure they'll be here soon. You can go straight to your hospital and wait for me. I just feel so bad and want you to stay with me."

He sounded like he was really suffering. Aggie's heart ached and she nodded, "Okay."

After ending the call, Aggie hurriedly put on her clothes and went to the hospital. She was waiting in the cold for most of the day before the ambulance returned with Tam.

He had a high fever. The nurse put him on an IV and he was admitted to the hospital room.

Aggie went in with him. Tam had a fever and passed out at this time. He had been pushing himself to be tough before. Aggie promised to come to the hospital to accompany him, which set his mind at rest. So he fell asleep.

After the doctors and nurses left, the room was quiet. Aggie took a chair over, sat down at the bedside, and looked at Tam quietly, and she was upset.

She regretted it.

She regretted being angry with Tam and ignoring him. If she had called him and cared about him, he wouldn't have had such a serious fever.

She thought it was strange when she heard from Dante yesterday that Tam was stabbed by Patrick. During the day she finally figured out that Tam deliberately got hurt and suffered in front of her to upset her.

After she figured out the reason he did this, she felt bad. They obviously like each other, so why did she have to be so cowardly as to run away and thus let the man she loved suffer all this?

If she hadn't been so cowardly as to break up, Tam wouldn't have done this, and wouldn't have been injured and had the inflammation of his wounds that caused his fever to go so high.

She gently held Tam's hand and asked herself silently in her heart: Aggie, is this what you want? Do you want the man you love lying in a hospital bed suffering?

The answer was definitely no.

She loved Tam, so how come she wanted to see him suffer? She wished him to be happy.

When she broke up with him, she also hoped that he would meet a better woman, who could give him a family and a future.

But now...

After the breakup, she had seen clearly what Tam had done during this time. If Tam's happiness and joy were given by her, she was willing to muster up the courage to take another step forward.

After making such a decision in her heart, Aggie suddenly felt less stressed and less feared about their future.

Being feeble, Tam kept sweating, and Aggie went to buy a clean towel and kept wiping it for him.

Seeing Tam like that, Aggie could not be more distressed.

Tam woke up once, but then fell back to sleep because he was still feverish. After he opened his eyes and made sure that Aggie was really there with him instead of leaving him behind, Tam slept very soundly.

He was really exhausted. He was already injured and didn't rest all day today. He had been working on the cooperation of the film and television city, and in the evening, he went out to feast. When he came back, he felt unwell.

It was said that people were extraordinarily vulnerable when they were sick, and Tam was no exception.

When he was suffering in bed, he couldn't help but think, "What's the point of all this? For the sake of making himself suffer? To be separated from Aggie for so many days and to be lonely and sleepless every night?"

No.

He could say for sure that this was not what he wanted.

What he wanted was to live in peace and quiet with the woman he loved.

So why didn't he give in in the first place?

When Aggie didn't want to get married, he shouldn't force her.

She didn't want to have children, and he should just let her be.

Why should he insist on forcing her to get married? Why did he have to keep her for himself? It was not like he didn't know she got some pretty serious demons.

Even if he agreed to break up with her, he always had the idea of winning her back and letting her marry him.

Now he regretted it.

He regretted that he fell into the obsession of marriage, but also got Aggie involved in his anxiety.

When he recovered tomorrow, he must tell her: As long as they got back together and never broke up, she could do whatever she wanted, and it didn't matter if they didn't get married.

Aggie stayed awake until Tam's IV was completely finished, and it was after 4:00 am.

The nurse took Tam's temperature and it was not as high as before but he was still feverish.

Even if the IV was administered in time, it was impossible for the fever to be rid of all of a sudden. It still took time.

Aggie just lay by Tam's bedside and squinted for a while, and she woke up around six o'clock.

She immediately called Tam's chef and asked him to make some porridge and a light breakfast to send to the hospital.

The chef was shocked to hear that Tam was hospitalized with a high fever, but seeing that Aggie was with Tam, he had nothing to worry about. He hung up and rushed to prepare breakfast.

When Tam woke up, he felt a lot fresher and didn't feel drowsy and weak from last night.

The nurse came in and took his temperature, and the fever was completely gone, so Aggie was relieved.

After the nurse left, Tam grabbed Aggie's hand, stared at her affectionately, and said, "Thank you for coming to stay with me last night."

Aggie didn't say anything. He didn't need to thank her since she had come of her own free will.

Tam said again, "Aggie, I'm sorry."

"It's my fault. I shouldn't have pushed you. I knew you got some pretty serious demons in your heart..."
Tam apologized in a crestfallen tone.

Aggie was moved and whispered to him, "You don't have to apologize. Actually--"

Aggie wanted to say that she was wrong, but she was interrupted before she could finish.

And the person who interrupted her was Ruby.

Ruby heard the news of Tam's hospitalization from somewhere, so she rushed over early in the morning.

After entering the ward, she was still reckless, rushing over to push Aggie to the side and saying to Tam with a worried look, "Tam, why are you in the hospital again? How do you feel now?"

Then she grumbled, "As I said, you couldn't live without someone to take care of you, but you wouldn't let me stay at your house."

Ruby didn't rein it in a little, which really got on Tam's nerves.

With a sullen face, he said to Ruby, "Miss Pond, even if I need someone to take care of me, that person will not be you."

After that, he reached out and pulled Aggie, who had been pushed aside by Ruby, and said to Ruby aggressively, "Miss Pond, I'm very weak now, and I just want Aggie to stay with me. If there's nothing else, you can go."

Tam was kicking her out rudely.

For the sake of Mr. Pond, Tam had always shown some respect to Ruby. However, Ruby was impolite again and again, so Tam did not need to be nice to her.

"Tam!" Ruby was so angry that she cried out.

Dante and Elyse arrived just at the right time to visit Tam and were vexed to see Ruby making a scene again.

Dante came over and asked, "Miss Pond, what are you doing here?"

Ruby said aggressively, "I heard that Tam has a fever. So I came to take a look."

Dante took one look at Tam and Aggie and said, "Miss Pond, President Finger may not be in the best condition to see guests at this time, so you should go back first."

Ruby huffed, "If he's not fit to see guests, then what are you doing here?"

Dante was choked by her words and did not say anything for a while.

Aggie, who had been silent, suddenly spoke up and didn't sound friendly, "Miss Pond is not going to leave?"

Ruby stood there with her arms folded, provocatively saying, "What can you do to me if I don't leave? Can you have me kicked out?"

Then she added, "Tam is my father's partner, so what if I come to visit him on my father's behalf?"

"Even if he goes home, I can still visit him at his place, not to mention the hospital," Ruby spoke in an extremely arrogant manner and despised Aggie.

Tam yelled at Ruby with a sullen look, "Miss Pond!"

He did not bother with her for her father's sake, but she repeatedly targeted Aggie, Tam was furious.

But before he could say anything harsh, Aggie suddenly raised her hand and gently pressed on his shoulder, signaling him to keep quiet for a while.

Aggie looked at Ruby and smiled, "I never knew someone can force a visit on him despite his wishes."

Elyse echoed mockingly, "No, that's unheard of."

They chimed in with each other and Ruby was furious.

Aggie didn't care about Ruby who was making a scene anymore and asked Elyse, "Elyse, you're here in time. Does he still need to be hospitalized now?"

Elyse was a professional nurse and had seen this kind of symptom many times, so she immediately said, "If the fever is gone, it means the inflammation has basically subsided. In fact, he does not need to stay in the hospital. He can go home and take anti-inflammatory drugs for a few days."

Aggie nodded, then looked at Tam next to her and asked, "So you'll be discharged?"

Tam would not object. When he saw Aggie was so kind to him, he was joyful at this time. Now he listened to whatever Aggie told him to do.

And he also heard from Aggie's tone that she wanted to deal with Ruby.

So how could he not support Aggie?

He nodded and smiled softly at Aggie, "Okay, you're the boss."

Ruby's eyes nearly popped out of her head when she saw he was obedient to Aggie.

She had been chasing after Tam since they were in America, and he always gave her that attitude. But now he was being gentle with Aggie.

CHAPTER 709 AGGIE, I ONLY WANT YOU TO BE BY MY SIDE.

After hearing Tam's supportive reply, Aggie ignored Ruby and turned to Dante.

Since Ruby disrespected her, she didn't take Ruby seriously in return.

Then Aggie's voice sounded, "Mr. Belson, please send Miss Pond out and leave space for Tam to recuperate."

Aggie's words showed her intention to drive Ruby away. In an instant, Ruby flew into a rage.

"Aggie!" Ruby didn't expect Aggie to tell Dante to send her out without sparing sensibilities.

Dante was a sturdy man and could drag her out easily. Most importantly, he didn't show tenderness for women and had done this to her before.

When she tried to break into Tam's hotel room in the United States, Dante threw her out.

At that time, she thought that a rude and unromantic man like Dante would be single forever, but she later learned that he had a girlfriend and was about to marry her.

After coming to South City, Ruby was even more surprised that Dante's girlfriend was a beautiful woman.

It was Elyse who was now meekly standing with Dante with a happy look. Could she have a happy life with Dante?

Aggie ignored Ruby's yelling.

Then she said to Elyse, "Go through the discharge formalities with me."

Elyse held back her smile and responded, "Okay."

To be honest, it was the first time that Elyse saw Aggie retort someone else in this way. Although Aggie acted calmly, her domineering aura was undoubtedly on display. At this moment, Ruby must be furious with Aggie's targeting behavior.

After saying that, Aggie turned and left with Elyse.

Behind them, Dante tried to hold back his laughter and keep his majestic and appalling aura.

Tam couldn't help but laugh out loud. When faced with Aggie's domineering counterattack on Ruby, he almost applauded, not to mention holding back his laughter.

Ruby was about to explode, but she couldn't do anything with Aggie.

After a few steps, Aggie suddenly stopped and turned to Dante. "Mr. Belson, tell the driver to send your boss to my house in case someone comes to visit him as a client. My house, my rule. No one can go in without my permission."

Dante was confused by Aggie's words and suspected that he had misheard her.

Did Aggie tell him to send Tam to her house?

Dante turned to Tam on the hospital bed and saw his smiling face and hot eyes on Aggie.

Everyone knew the significance of Aggie's instruction to send Tam to her house. It meant that she planned to make up with Tam.

Dante came to his senses and answered solemnly, "Yes, Dr. Winn."

Then Aggie walked out of the ward with Elyse in a dashing and arrogant manner, while Ruby was on the verge of crying with anger.

Dante walked over and said politely, "Miss Pond, please leave"

Ruby glared at him in exasperation and then at Tam on the hospital bed, "Tam, you're going too far!"

Tam looked at her lazily and coldly. "Why do you say that?"

"Miss Pond, I've told you that Dr. Winn is my beloved woman. Am I going against her for my client's daughter?"

Tam told the truth bluntly.

Ruby stood staring at him and shed tears of grievance.

Seeing this, Dante spoke impatiently, "Miss Pond, to be frank, you need to win face and self-respect by yourself."

The implication was that Ruby deserved it.

Ruby wiped her tears and ran out after a fierce glare at Dante.

At this point, Tam looked at Dante and instructed, "Send her home."

Dante understood what Tam meant and replied, "Okay."

After all, Ruby was President Pond's daughter, and they had just reached cooperation with President Pond.

Fortunately, President Pond was a reasonable person and stopped supporting Ruby to pester him after seeing that he only loved Aggie.

As soon as Elyse left the ward door with Aggie, she took Aggie's arm and laughed out loud, "Aggie, did you see Ruby's gloomy face just now?!"

Then she praised Aggie, "I've never seen you retort someone else in this way. It's so wonderful!"

Aggie asked Dante to arrange for a driver to send Tam to her house and then naturally had a reason to turn Ruby away.

Elyse realized with hindsight that Aggie's behavior ... didn't it mean ... she was going to make up with Tam?

"Aggie, you—" Elyse asked Aggie in surprise.

Aggie knew what Elyse meant and didn't deny it. "I've done a lot of thinking recently. People in love shouldn't torture each other."

Elyse nodded vigorously. "That's right!"

During Aggie's breakup with Tam, Elyse had matured a lot watching from the sidelines as an outsider.

That was, she learned to cherish.

She knew to cherish Dante and their relationship.

Compared to Tam's hindered relationship with Aggie, they went too smoothly.

How could she not cherish it?

Therefore, when Dante mentioned marrying her again, she didn't oppose it.

Aggie was right. People in love shouldn't torture each other but be happy together!

Only when Aggie finished the discharge formalities for Tam and fetched his oral medicine according to the doctor's advice did she return to Tam's ward.

It happened that the chef came over with the breakfast he had prepared, and then they had a simple breakfast together in the ward.

Upon hearing the news that Tam was going to be discharged from the hospital, the chef asked hastily, "What would you like for lunch? I'll go back and prepare it now."

Speaking of this, Tam couldn't help but smile, "Don't prepare it. I'll stay at Dr. Winn's place for the next few days."

The chef almost thought he had misheard Tam. Was he going to stay at Aggie's place? Didn't it mean that the two were going to be together again?

The chef didn't see Aggie's objection and was at once delighted with their reconciliation.

After breakfast, Dante arranged a driver to help Tam out of the hospital with Aggie.

The driver took them to Aggie's apartment and left. Then Aggie turned to the kitchen to boil water and was ready to give Tam his medicine.

Tam should sit on the sofa to rest, but he couldn't hold back his joy. Now that only the two of them were left here, he first wanted to talk to Aggie. However, Aggie didn't seem to have any intention to chat with him.

In that case, he would take the initiative to talk to her.

When Aggie saw Tam appear in the kitchen, she said with a frown, "If you are hospitalized again because of tearing your wound, I will leave you alone."

The doctor had instructed him to recuperate well, but he ran into the kitchen now.

Ignoring this, Tam walked over to stand in front of Aggie and said in an intimate tone, "Thank you."

Then Tam looked at Aggie's cold face and thought of her retorting Ruby in the ward. In an instant, he couldn't resist his touch, stretched out his uninjured arm around her waist, and wanted to kiss her.

Aggie reared her head back slightly and frowned at Tam. "What are you doing? Didn't you promise not to do anything to me?"

Tam explained, "I did say that, but I chose to respect you because we were in a breakup period at that time. Now our relationship is different, isn't it?"

Aggie knew what he meant but deliberately refuted him, "Is there any difference between our relationship?"

Tam continued, "You let me live in your apartment. Isn't it equivalent to you making up with me? Since we are back together, you're my girlfriend. So it is righteous for me to kiss you."

Aggie tilted her head and chuckled, "I never mentioned that we were back together."

Tam, "..."

She didn't say it, but her actions represented everything, didn't they?

Aggie added, "I just don't want Ruby to harass you and delay your recovery, so I brought you to my home. That's all."

Tam was at a loss for words again.

He stood there staring at Aggie and tried to see from her face what she was thinking, but she controlled her emotion so well that he couldn't read anything.

When Tam thought that Aggie might have told the truth just now, he panicked at once.

"Aggie, you—" Tam was incoherent for the first time in his life.

After calming himself down, he glared at her and threw a threat. "If you refuse to reconciled with me, I'll jump off your apartment right now."

It left Aggie speechless.

After staring at Tam for a while, Aggie gave a helpless smile, "Tam, are you so sensitive? Are you threatening me with death?"

At the sight of her smiling face, Tam reached out to hug her and replied, "Yes."

Tam buried his face into her neck and sighed deeply, "I'm meek to you. Aggie, I just want to be with you and never go through a breakup or silent treatment with you anymore."

Suddenly, he stood up, looked down at Aggie, and said word by word, "It's all my fault. If you don't want marriage or children, we will live that way. As long as I stay with you, I can ask for nothing else."

(To be continued)

CHAPTER 710 LET OUR RELATIONSHIP RUN ITS COURSE.

After Tam finished speaking, Aggie froze there because she didn't expect Tam to say these words.

He could give up his marriage or children just to be with her.

Apart from the shock, Aggie was touched by his deep love for her.

How could she not be moved when Tam regarded her as the most important person?

Aggie wanted to apologize to him and stated that she would try to get out of her psychological shadow and give him a complete home, but he told her this first.

As a strong woman, Aggie shed tears like a crybaby at this moment.

She gently wrapped her arms around his waist, buried her head in his arms, and choked out, "Tam, I owe you an apology..."

"I'm sorry for my past cowardice and break-up with you." Aggie grabbed his lapel and whispered, "From now on, I will try to—"

Tam interrupted her by calling her name, "Aggie." Then he said seriously, "I don't want to force you to do anything for me, and you shouldn't have pressure. Just let our relationship run its course, okay?"

Aggie cried even louder, "Okay..."

Then they embraced each other and fell into silence for a long time.

When Aggie calmed down, she suddenly remembered Tam's injured arm and urged him, "Go sit down on the sofa. I'll get you some water and feed you some medicine."

"Well." Tam agreed but quickly kissed Aggie on the cheek when she turned around. Instantly, Aggie cast a fierce glare at him with a blush and went on to pour water, while Tam left the kitchen satisfied.

When Aggie went through the discharge formalities for Tam, she asked herself for a morning's leave to take care of Tam. The reason why she didn't ask for a day's leave was that some of her patients had made appointments in advance. She had to appear at the clinic and didn't want them to come again another day. After all, it wasn't easy for some people to come to the hospital.

Of course, Tam understood her approach because he knew that she carried a heavy burden as a doctor.

Besides, he didn't need care and felt that he was almost healed.

Because they were reconciled, his wound had been psychologically healed.

Aggie prepared the lunch in the kitchen, while Tam snapped a picture of her slender back at the kitchen door and posted it on his WeChat moments with the text, "I am happy and content."

Except for Elyse and Dante, others didn't know that they had reconciled.

So after he updated his WeChat moments, messages flooded into his phone.

Tam was nestled on the sofa waiting for Aggie's lunch while replying to the messages one by one.

In addition, Tam took the initiative to call Maynard, who saw Tam's updated WeChat moments and was waiting for his call.

Maynard asked in a joyful tone, "Tam, have you and Aggie reconciled?"

After Tam told him the whole story about reconciliation, Maynard sighed with relief, "Great. Aggie has the idea of reconciliation. It means that her psychological shadow is slowly dissipating."

Maynard thought they were reconciled all due to Tam's initiative without Aggie's positive response, but he didn't expect Aggie to have taken the initiative and was joyful about it.

At this moment, that was a weight off Maynard's mind.

He had been in poor health these days because Moira angered him, and he had been worrying about Tam and Aggie's relationship.

All of a sudden, Tam said to Maynard seriously, "Uncle Maynard, I don't care whether Aggie overcomes her psychological shadow or not, so I hope you won't rush her to get married in the future."

This was the main purpose of Tam's phone call to Maynard.

As Aggie's father, Maynard would push for marriage. Even if he didn't do it now, he would be impatient to push her as time went on.

After this experience, Tam didn't want anyone to mention marriage to Aggie again.

Maynard sighed, "It's hard for you. I won't mention it."

Tam smiled, "Uncle Maynard, don't say that. I am willing to do it."

"Now I just want to live a happy life with Aggie. That's enough for me."

It was Tam's heartfelt wish. People always grew from experiences and learned to cherish.

Maynard was very moved by Tam's words.

Although he had an unhappy marriage, and many men cheated on their wives in today's society, he still chose to believe that Tam would be faithful to Aggie.

Aggie saw Tam's updated WeChat moments after getting lunch ready. At this time, many of her acquaintances left messages in Tam's comment section, but almost all of them were shocked expressions and neatly arranged there. In this way, these people expressed their shock at Tam's reconciliation with Aggie.

As for Tam, he replied to all the commenters with a funny kissing emoji.

Aggie looked at their emojis and couldn't help but chuckle at her phone.

She could feel everyone's blessings for them and Tam's feeling of triumph and joy.

After a short ponder, Aggie looked across at Tam and asked, "Do you have a chat group with Ivan and the others? Can I join it?"

Aggie thought that Tam couldn't be the active party all the time, and she should take the initiative to do something.

Tam was surprised at first and then replied quickly, "Of course, you can. I'll pull you in our group right away."

He picked up his phone and sent a message in their group, "I'll pull Dr. Winn in. Be careful not to call her Sister Aggie but Dr. Winn."

Tam took the initiative to remind this point because he didn't want Aggie to have any pressure. After all, she should be called "Sister Aggie" after marriage.

After his message, all the people in the group solemnly promised not to make this mistake.

It wasn't easy for Tam to reconcile with Aggie, so they couldn't cause trouble for him. Otherwise, they didn't know what scheme Tam would come up with in case he broke up with Aggie again. This time he played a trick of self-injury to win Aggie's sympathy. As his good friends, they were distressed for him.

After Tam invited Aggie into the chat group, all the members greeted her warmly, "Hello, Dr. Winn."

Seeing this, Aggie remembered that Ivan called her "Sister Aggie" last time and looked across at Tam. Then she realized that he must have told them something in advance because of being worried about her feelings.

But Aggie said nothing and responded to them with her head down, "Hello, everyone. "

Then she continued, "I'm sorry for what happened at the last foundation. My relationship with Tam affected you, so I will invite you to dinner when Tam gets better."

She took the initiative to propose an invitation for a formal meeting.

Tam cast a surprised look at Aggie with joy flashing in his eyes.

He could feel that Aggie had changed a lot after this breakup.

A week later, Tam's wound healed and stitches were removed. Then Aggie moved back to Tam's house.

Given the convenience for Tam to go to the hospital for a dressing change, Aggie let him live in her apartment. But now, Tam's stitches have been removed, and he didn't need to go to the hospital very often, so they moved back to Tam's house. It was comfortable and spacious here, with complete facilities and functions, a place to enjoy life in leisure time.

For example, the luxurious audio-visual room was especially suitable for a couple to sit inside and quietly watch a movie at leisure. It was so warm and romantic.

After living together again, Tam and Aggie had a simple but happy life.

Soon, Tam recovered and officially took over Maynard's company. Only then did Aggie learn that Tam had reached an agreement with Maynard before their reconciliation and had no idea what to say about the two men.

Now that Tam had reconciled with Aggie and managed the company, Maynard was relieved to go to the town and usually didn't come back. He was at ease there to recuperate in isolation.

In the twinkling of an eye, the New Year was coming. According to Maynard's wishes, he would spend the New Year in town. Hence, Aggie packed her things and went back to the town to accompany Maynard as soon as the hospital was on holiday.

Tam followed Aggie to live in the town for a few days, but he went back to his grandparents' house on New Year's Eve. Since the old couple was alive, he naturally had to go back and spend the New Year with them.

In the past, Tam always spent the New Year with his grandparents, but Howard appeared there this year. Before this, Howard spent it with Alia and Maria, but he could only come to his parents because his hypocritical home was broken this year.

Tam and Howard disliked each other. They bickered or made sarcastic remarks whenever they met, so Tam thought that it was good for him not to be married to Aggie yet. Otherwise, Aggie would have to meet with Howard on New Year's eve or other festivals and be disgusted by his behaviors.

New Year's Eve had finally passed. Early in the next morning, Tam drove away from his grandparents' house and went straight to the town to find Aggie.

Aggie and Maynard spent a happy time. Everything went well with them, so how could they not be happy?

It was much livelier to spend the New Year in the town than in the cold metropolis. Every family visited each other to give New Year's greetings, and even Aggie, who has never liked crowds, was affected by the festive gaiety.

Most importantly, the town didn't have a ban on fireworks, so it was even more lively here.
