

TIMELESS LOVE

CHAPTER 24 MAKE AMENDS FOR HER FAULT WITH GOOD DEEDS.

When Adeline was escorted out by her son, she said to Leon in an overwhelmingly positive tone, "Leon, you're asking for so much! It's useless at all because when you meet that person everything won't matter, even if she's less than one meter and six tall."

Adeline stared at Leon again after saying that, "Unless you like a girl right now, and everything you are asking for is according to her standards."

"You think too much." Leon waved at her, "It's getting late and be careful on your way."

Adeline had to leave. From her observation, what those people on the board of directors said wasn't true that Leon had an affair with Hathaway. Because he didn't say anything when she had just criticized Hathaway, and Adeline also believed that her son wouldn't be the kind of superficial man who would like Hathaway.

After sending his mother away, Leon returned to the dining table, took out the food his mother had brought, and set it up one by one, and then he went to the bedroom. Hathaway was sleeping soundly in his bed.

In the meantime, Leon couldn't help but frown. She was so bold. His mother was just outside, and she was even able to fall asleep.

Hathaway was sleepy. Last night she and Leon tossed around until midnight and went to the hospital, but after a few hours of sleep, she had to get up to go to the office and attend the meeting tensely in the afternoon. And then Ashley woke up.

And just now, she was crying to beg him not to kick her out of the game.

During this day and night, Hathaway's life was full of ups and downs.

Both physically and mentally, she had reached her limit, so as soon as she got into bed she fell asleep.

However, not long after she had slept comfortably, she suddenly started to feel difficulty in breathing and someone was holding her nose to prevent her from breathing on purpose. Raising her hand to slap the unkind hand, she protested angrily, "I want to sleep! Go away! It's annoying..."

"Hathaway!" Leon who was disliked by her angrily picked her up from his bed, "Go back to your own home to sleep."

Hathaway opened her eyes to look at him in confusion. She looked around and finally said soberly, "Sorry, I'm sleepy..."

Did she just say Leon was annoying?

Hathaway sat there with her head down and ruffled her hair in frustration and she hoped that he could give her a chance and ignore what she said just now even though this man was capricious.

When she was apprehensive, Leon calmly said, "Come out to have dinner."

He left the bedroom first, Hathaway wanted to cheer when she heard that there was still food to eat. She lifted up the blanket and got out of the bed to follow Leon to the dining room.

"Smells so good--" After sitting down at the table, Hathaway was staring at the food on the table. Her eyes were glowing and she was almost drooling.

Hathaway hadn't eaten anything at night either intentionally to starve herself to win Leon's sympathy, and she was already ravenous.

After Leon picked up the chopsticks and started eating, Hathaway also started, Leon only felt the tendons in his forehead jumping as he watched her eat. It was no exaggeration to say that he had lived for thirty-two years and no girl around him ate like her.

She was at least the daughter of Taylor family, but why she didn't look like a lady at all.

He maintained his elegant eating table manner while he couldn't help but ask, "How many years have you not had meals?"

Hathaway knew he was laughing at her table manner, but she knew how to be dignified and elegant, and she obeyed all the public etiquette in front of other people.

Now she was just too hungry, and she felt that she had no elegance in front of Leon anyway, so she simply stopped pretending and planned to satisfy herself.

Ignoring his derision, she instead exclaimed, "Wow, was it cooked by your Mom? It's so wonderful and delicious and your mother is so virtuous."

Leon glanced at her, "It was made by my chef and my Mom isn't virtuous either."

Hathaway, "..."

She didn't seem to have the right compliment.

Hathaway didn't have a big appetite, so after she was full, she put down her chopsticks and admired Leon's elegant table manner as she persistently asked, "May I ask if I can make amends for my fault with good deeds?"

"Make amends for your fault with good deeds?" Leon was amused by her words and slowly asked her, "Do you have any good deed?"

"I just did that for you, didn't I?" After all, Hathaway was a girl who had only had sex once, so she couldn't face the indescribable things she had just done. She stared at the man across her angrily, "Hey, you're not going to pull up your pants and deny it, are you?"

Leon looked at her and said with a serious and stern tone, "Today's situation will never happen."

"I know! I know!" Hathaway was so happy, "That's so nice of you!"

Because she was in such a good mood and Hathaway felt that mere words couldn't express how joyful she felt at this moment, she stood up and ran over to Leon to kiss him on his face.

Leon became unhappy after Hathaway kissed him because he knew clearly that Hathaway had just had chicken soup before kissing him.

He got up with a disgusted expression and went to the bathroom to wash his oily face.

Hathaway was speechless and took a napkin to wipe her mouth. She also disliked him for making her hand dirty.

When Leon sat back down at the table, Hathaway's phone just happened to ring, which was from Andrew.

Hathaway felt distressed.

With a guilty glance at Leon across her, Hathaway got up and walked aside to answer the phone and asked respectfully, "Andrew, what happened?"

Andrew's voice was calm on the phone, "I heard that you messed up at the meeting of Davis Group today?"

Hathaway was instinctively on guard, "You're not here to gloat, are you?"

"Hathaway." It seemed hard for Andrew to say it, "Do you know originally I was going to give up everything in South City to go to London to be with you if you hadn't come back ."

"I know you don't like my parents and I know you don't like Abby, and I know your mind that I am your cousin, so I want to live with you in a place where no one knows us. I've worked so hard for you, but now you say I'm gloating..."

Andrew sounded incomparably heartbreaking and decadent, and Hathaway felt sorrowful on hearing him.

To be frank, although Tom Taylor had been fighting with Paul Taylor for power, Andrew had never treated Paul with any disrespect and he treated Ashley and her kindly, unlike Abby, who had always pointedly regarded them as enemies.

Andrew said toughly at that end, "If it wasn't for the consideration of your feelings all these years, Taylor Group would have been mine long ago. Do you think that Kenny can be my opponent?"
